Citgo free oil appears to be a no-go for 2009

By Tyler Rhodes

Rural Alaskans counting on free heating fuel from Venezuelan-owned Citgo Petroleum should take another look at how much they have budgeted to keep their home warm this winter.

Despite earlier signs that the program would again be implemented this year, it appears that the assistance has been shelved—at least for now.

According to a press release issued from Citizens Energy Corp., the Massachusetts firm that administers the program, falling oil prices have forced Citgo to take a second look at the assistance which has meant a couple months of free heat for many rural Alaskans for the past few years.

"Citizens Energy has recently been informed by Citgo that due to falling oil prices and the world economic crisis, Citgo has been forced to re-evaluate all their social programs, including the heating oil program, which has provided hundreds of thousands of low-income U.S. households with much-needed fuel these past three years," said Citizens Energy Chairman and President Joseph P. Kennedy II in a press release. "As a result, the heating oil program has been suspended until further notice. It remains unclear how long this postponement, if it is one, will last."

In the Norton Sound region, the heating oil program has been run by Kawerak Inc. Dawn Salesky, Kawerak's Vice President of Education, Employment and Training, said initial indications were that the program would again be implemented this year. She only learned of the change of plans through the media. "All I know is what I read in cbsnews.com yesterday and then it appeared in the [Anchorage Daily News]," she said.

Even though she said she usually does not get the definitive go-ahead for the program until January, Salesky said she was already beginning preparations for this year's program. "I started contacting the villages, getting household lists together," Salesky said.

At the state level, the program is administered by the Alaska Inter-Tribal Council. Salesky said she has not heard from the organization yet. In media reports earlier this week, a representative from the group said it has not received any official message from Citgo.

Kennedy of Citizens Energy said he is pressing Citgo to continue the program. "All of us at Citizens Energy continue to do everything we can to advocate for a continuation of this vital assistance," he said in the

Nome looks to gain from proposed federal economic stimulus package that would include funds for construction projects

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council sees a rainbow that may lead to a pot of money to finish some work and start even more construction projects.

Getting to the end of this rainbow involves diligence in preparing construction-ready projects to seek a piece of the federal economic stimulus package divvied up among the states.

"We should hire a lobbyist to push through the stimulus package," Councilman Jon Larson told the Council. "The figures we are talking about are huge. We should push the hospital and the public safety building."

President-elect Barack Obama's economic recovery package will include domestic infrastructure investments. To enhance chances of getting a share and to back a list of federal legislative priorities, the panel voted Dec. 22 to hire a federal lobbyist for the next 120 days with a salary and expense cap of $100,000. The City's utility lobbyist, Larry Markley, will also help steer the possible resources Nome's direction, according to Nome Joint Utility System Manager John K. Handeland.

The Alaska Municipal League, of which Nome's mayor, Denise Michels, is president, is backing getting money from Obama's package for a state Department of Transportation western Alaska access study and money for ports and harbors as facilities for national security and spill response.

Nome administrators agreed with the AML priorities with a letter to Gov. Sarah Palin emphasizing that roads in western Alaska would promote the development and transmission of alternative energy. Additionally, the City would like to see continued support of the port and sea-

NovaGold gets $60 million cash infusion, Rock Creek still on hold

By Tyler Rhodes

The owner of the Rock Creek Mine has struck a $60 million deal that will allow it to repay debt and further invest in other mining projects that are still in the development phase.

Whether NovaGold Resources Inc. will use any of that money toward restarting operations at the mine near Nome has yet to be decided.

In an e-mail to The Nome Nugget NovaGold president and CEO Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse said restarting the Rock Creek Mine is not simply a question of whether or not NovaGold has the money on hand to solve the hiccups that have prevented full production as of yet.

"[We] will examine the possibility of restarting the operation; however, it must make economic sense to do so. At this time we have not made a decision to do so. Obviously, answering that question has many facets and variables—including gold price and willingness of the state to grant workable permits," Van Nieuwenhuyse wrote. "We have just begun the process of evaluating this alternative. Regardless, we are committed to suspending and placing the mine on care and maintenance, and have submitted a plan to the state that we feel is appropriate to do so."

Under the deal between NovaGold and Electrum Strategic Resources LLC announced Jan. 2, Electrum will become NovaGold's largest shareholder with a 30 percent stake in the company. Options in the deal could increase that ownership stake to as high as 46 percent.

Lingering water keeps NovaGold at work

By Tyler Rhodes

The suspension of production at the Rock Creek Mine just outside of Nome has not meant that all construction at the facility has come to a halt.

NovaGold is working to complete its water treatment facility, an element necessary for the mine to meet state requirements in regard to its dam. The dam—behind which approximately 54.2 million gallons of water has accumulated

Letters

Hello Nancy.
This letter has concerns about AICA company not helping out its money makers.The stores here in Alaska are the money makers for ANICA company. ANICA should be helping us out at least with our fuel prices— the national average of the cost of fuel is at its lowest in many years. I think that if ANICA wanted to help its customers it should buy bulk fuel now while the cost is way down and then mix the price of what we are paying for now. I think that would make the price come quite a bit down. Otherwise, just get rid of the markup of the fuel or at least part of it. I believe that if ANICA would do away with the markup on the fuel it wouldn't hurt the company at all because everything is way over priced.
Another really upsetting thing is that a bunch of us, if not the whole village, received bills from a collection company that threatens with a percentage growth if not paid in a timely manner. Why weren't we just notified right here from our store?
At one time we the ANICA customers were all filling out papers every time we shopped. At least we were given a number, we were told that we would be getting rebates. A lot of us got excited on the fact that we would get nice rebates if we bought our sno-machines, boats, four-wheelers, outboards etc. Well, that never happened. Maybe it was just an enticement for us to buy all the things we need at ANICA prices. Another thing here is that everytime the ANICA advisers come to our village for our annual meeting they always say that Savoonga was the store that makes the most money for ANICA. Was that supposed to make us proud?

I will bet that if a lawyer would look into this all the rebate papers would not be available, no records would be there for us to pursue the rebates that we deserve to have. I myself bought a lot of expensive items on the thought of getting nice rebates from our ANICA store.
It would be very interesting to see a lawyer or lawyers look into this rebate matter. I have heard that some villages do get rebates from their ANICA stores. If that is true someone please let other ANICA customers know....
Thank you.

Dear Editor
I just returned from watching the Nome-Beltz Nanooks win the championship game at the ACS Invitation here in Anchorage. It's been almost 25 years since I graduated from NBHS, I don't know the coach and I only know the players by familiar last names or how similar they look to their parents.
I just wanted to congratulate the team and coach on their terrific performance. Despite winning all three games by wide margins, each member of the team displayed remarkable sportsmanship and talent throughout the tournament. The team was poised, focused and well coached. I predict its going to be a great season for the mighty Nanooks!

NovaGold did nothing wrong and spent a lot of money to improve all state agency requests and also this group too. I was very surprised at how NovaGold officials were patient and didn't fight back. At the same time I am so glad they were very professional and strong even in this situation.
So! Now over 100 people were laid off and nobody from this group came to us or to the job service to bring some alternative idea or support for people who lost their job in middle of winter.
Ms. Steinacher, in a letter to the editor, tries explaining her position and bringing some sympathy to people who lost jobs, but I think it is too little and too late.

We have democracy in this county and everybody has a right to oppose some ideas, construction projects and etc; but sthey have to bring alternative idea or strong business plans to make sure people have jobs.
If this is not happening, I think people who oppose any development mining projects are digging a financial hole for the communities and state, because up to 80 percent of state revenue comes from oil and mining businesses.

Dear Editor
We have a bone to pick with the boys at the D.O.T. They've done such an amazing job with clearing the roads that we haven't been able to miss a single day of work! Also, the road this summer was maintained so well that we didn't have to repair any tires or shocks on our vehicles.
Last winter it was reassuring to know that with new babies in Banner Creek, we would be able to get to town if need be. And we just really appreciate the wonderful job you've done maintaining the roads. Thank you!

Dear Nancy,
2008 year is gone and in general it was a good year for the Nome community, especially for businesses that provided services for Rock Creek mining.
Basically, all the community was supported and benefited from this project, except the few people who chose, based on their own or somebody's ambition, misunderstanding, to fight against NovaGold and state-federal agency.
They succeeded, because NovaGold spent a lot money, time to response to all legal challenges and unprofessional requests from a Nome small group of people who decided to take from us the constitutional right do our business and make money for living.

The State budget was created based on the price of $75 for a barrel of oil: it now under it is $40. Large oil companies decided not to drill on the new arctic offshore zone, because they are tired fighting environmental extremists who do not live in Alaska.
Also large mining companies and projects like Pebble have some problems too and maybe someday will decide to move business from the state, because some people don't want to have stable state and community budgets...
I think the times for “Uncle Ted” money is over and it will be more and more difficult to receive state or federal funds. Mr. Stevens did a great job for the state, country, but it was a different time and the state had more choices to receive some funds— not like now, when the country has some economic problems.
Our state is probably the richest state in the nation and we have all the needed resources to improve our life and have a strong economy. We just need for some people to be realistic and recognize what world we have now around us.
We lost almost all the industrial bases in the county and are heavily dependent on foreign countries, especially for oil supply, goods and etc. This is not a good sign and we need do something before it is too late...
The US is a great country and we

Restore Confidence

Alaska has just celebrated 50 years of statehood. As a state and as a nation we have been through good times and bad, but we have endured, learned and grown stronger. We are a great state in a super powerful nation. As we stand at the threshold of another 50 years and a new order of government we must restore confidence in ourselves and to the rest of the world. How do we restore confidence? We do it by recognizing the existence of a problem— the economy and its credit markets are broken. The American people need to be involved in the restoration of the certainty and predictability of our economy.
Alaskans have suffered through greed and the betrayal of public trust by our elected officials. This needs to be ended. However, there is a deeper reform that needs to take place. We need to restore and reform government rules and regulations. We need confidence in government on all levels, local, state and federal. The most important is the local level. If local politics are open and transparent, then state and federal government will follow suit. We can look around us here in Nome and see the results of toothless regulations. We are sitting downstream from a mine which the State of Alaska bent over backward to develop. We spent millions to build a new “Road to Resources.” We gave permits with a wink and a nod. We had visions of pockets lined with gold. What we have is a closed mine, a company on the financial ropes, a tailings pond that is full of water that is seeping through an earthen dam.
We need to do a better job. All levels of government must be cognizant that their function is to serve the people and protect our resources. Restoration of faith and confidence in government is fundamental in making democracy and capitalism work. — N.L.M. —

Dear Editor,
I didn't get a chance to thank the City of Unalakleet and its people for the humbling award given to my wife and me at the annual Jamboree. Being a parent isn't easy for anyone and I was lucky to have great parental role models, ones that I don't approach. Donna and I are also blessed with five great boys who have, for the most part, been extremely easy to parent. In addition to these two things though, I was blessed to have grown up in Unalakleet. Life in the '60s and 70's was much simpler and our recreation was left to our imagination, but all of us children were surrounded by so many elders and parents who looked out for us and taught us. Some things have changed, but there remains a sense of greater “family”. Our youngest son is autistic and we have had much soul-searching about whether to move to a more urban setting to get better therapy options for him. The main reason we have chosen to remain is the “safety net” Unalakleet people provide for Logan. He sometimes wanders and is unaware of dangerous situations, but we are always grateful at how quickly others respond to help or call to alert us where he is. At school there isn't a single student who doesn't treat him nicely, not one who disrespects or teases him. We are unwilling to sacrifice this important benefit. As with most successful parents, it isn't a job that is accom-

Nome man perishes in the cold

A Nome resident was found dead Sunday morning behind the library. The police and the Nome Volunteer Ambulance and Fire services responded at approximately 10:30 a.m. after it was reported that Okinello was found not breathing at the above location. Okinello was transported to Norton Sound Regional Hospital where he was pronounced dead.

The police department statement said there was no indication of foul play. The statement issued by the police department said the area where Okinello was found is frequented by those who drink outdoors along Front Street. He was discovered on the path by Jack Amaktoolik and others who summoned help.

sonal U.S. Coast Guard facilities to support burgeoning exploration and commercial activities in arctic waters. The Council affirmed its support of water and sewer infrastructure improvements and construction of a new Carrie M. McClain Memorial Museum as top state legislative priorities for Nome. At the federal level, the Council put need for construction of a new Norton Sound Health Corp. hospital at the top of its list. In other action, the Council made final an ordinance taking the 5 percent sales tax off certain grocery items for 3.5 months, including food for human consumption taken away from the stores for preparation. The list of items exempt from tax from Jan. 15 thru April 30 coincides with the kinds of food eligible for federal food stamp purchases and the federal WIC program. The tax holiday does not apply to ready-to-eat food from the take-out counters. The Council's intent in passing the tax relief was in consideration of the increased costs of running a household and providing for families during the colder months because of what has been an unexpected and unusually fast rise in fuel prices. On Dec. 23 the Council had a work session slated to interview Dallas Massie as a temporary replacement for Chief of Police Paul Burke whose last day was Dec. 27. The Nome Nugget takes a look back at

By Tyler Rhodes

Whether you found them surprising, sublime or surreal, the people and events that made Alaska headlines in 2008 assured that the news would be anything but boring.

From Gov. Sarah Palin's rise to national prominence as she occupied the second spot on the Republican presidential ticket to Sen. Ted Stevens' conviction on federal charges and narrow loss in the election against former Anchorage Mayor Mark Begich, the state's biggest names went places hardly imaginable this time last year. One of the state's longest sagas also saw some resolution in 2008 as claimants in the Exxon Valdez oil spill case began to finally see settlement payments after waiting for decades.

While many of Alaska's top news stories over the last year were also making national headlines, The Nome Nugget takes a moment in its first issue of 2009 to look back over some of the more prominent happenings in our corner of the state during 2008.

Rock Creek Mine stumbles out of the gate

One of the biggest news stories of 2008 came toward the end of the year. Citing trouble with permitting requirements, cash flow and challenges in processing the ore at the Rock Creek Mine near Nome, NovaGold halted operations at the facility just after Thanksgiving. The indefinite suspension of production at the mine put 75 workers out of a job at the end of November.

Started in September, NovaGold's flirtation with production at the mine was a short-lived affair. Troubles arose as the mine went through its commissioning process. A transistor bank failed in October, delaying production for several weeks. Problems with the crusher appeared to be the final straw, as NovaGold could not ramp the mine up to full production without having to invest more money in the project.

In the final days of the year, NovaGold was able to extend a repayment schedule for a $20 million bridge loan that was due in December, keeping the company financially alive. Since the new year, the company has entered another financial agreement that will allow it to repay that bridge loan. Even with its finances a little more secure, however, NovaGold has not committed to any schedule to bring the Rock Creek Mine back to life. Rather, in press releases, the company cites its focus on developing properties, such as the Donlin Creek and Galore Creek mines.

End of an era

Nome saw two of its iconic eateries disappear in 2008. Gone are Fat Freddie's and the Glue Pot. The death of her husband, Bob Madden, in the fall of 2007 and fewer customers coming through the doors forced Connie Madden to call it quits after 22 years. Started at the Rec Center and then moved to Front Street, the business fed countless tourists, miners, locals and Iditarod mushers.

In the case of the Glue Pot, not only did the business disappear, but also the building that housed it. Within a few hours on Election Day in November, the tired blue building was nothing but a memory; the only thing left on the lot was graded dirt. With its best years long since passed, owner Pat Krier said the building's condition was the reason behind the business's closure.

For years the restaurant served as the hangout for Nome teens, both inside and outside its doors. Come 2 a.m., a steady flow of bar-goers would arrive looking for late-night food. While the business closed down in the spring, it wasn't until November when the building came down.

Bankruptcy for diocese

The Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska announced that the Fairbanks Diocese filed for Chapter 11 reorganization March 1. The filing came in response to more than 140 legal civil claims of sexual abuse of minors at the hands of Catholic priests, volunteers and lay workers in a time period spanning the 1960s through 1980s.

A deadline passed in December for victims of the past abuse to file for claims against the church. At least 220 claims have been filed.

Entangled in the matter could be the fate of Pilgrim Hot Springs, as the church-owned property may be used to either generate income or be sold outright to help satisfy claims against the diocese. The church regained control of the property after the bankruptcy court granted its request to terminate a lease with Pilgrim Hot Springs Ltd., a business entity. Under the lease, Pilgrim Hot Springs Ltd. was to develop the property in a manner that could provide a return to the church. In the decades the entity held the property, little was accomplished. Why development did not occur is a matter of dispute between the church and Pilgrim Hot Springs Ltd., which has a $2.9 million claim against the church.

Nome: Mushing central in '08 No stopping Mackey

Any doubt over Lance Mackey's dominance in long-distance mushing at the start of 2008 was thoroughly crushed in the wee hours of March 12. At 2:46 a.m., Mackey drove a team of 11 dogs down Nome's Front Street to claim his second Iditarod Sled Dog Race championship in a row. Just a few weeks earlier, Mackey had claimed his fourth Yukon Quest victory. He is the only musher to win both races in one season, and remarkably accomplished the unthinkable two years in a row.

Mackey's Iditarod win came after being trailed for days by legendary musher Jeff King, who appeared to have the upper hand with a larger team still in harnesses. A faked nap in Elim, however, gave Mackey the edge he needed over King. Lulled into thinking Mackey would be resting for a while, King took a rest himself. As King snored, Mackey sneaked out the door and into a sustainable lead. King finished the race an hour and 20 minutes after Mackey.

Nomeites also saw a familiar face lead her team of dogs up Front Street to the burled arch. Nome's 18-year-old Melissa Owens successfully completed her first Iditarod, finishing in 30th place out of the 78 who completed the race.

A race 100 years in the making

With a $100,000 winner-take-all purse and a storied history, the resurrected All Alaska Sweepstakes brought many mushers back to Nome shortly after the finish of the Iditarod. Celebrating its 100th anniversary, the 408-mile, out-and-back race from Nome to Candle saw a mix of big-time and local mushers hit the trail to Candle and back.

The trip through the finish chute on Front Street was again a bittersweet moment for King as it was once more in the shadow of the race winner. Seward musher Mitch Seavey set the course record and hauled home the big payout with his finish just minutes ahead of King. Seavey passed King just outside of Safety as the two raced for Nome. Mackey was unable to complete a triple crown in the mushing world last year, finishing third in the race.

Several Nomeites harnessed their dogs for the race, including Conner Thomas, Cari Miller, Kirsten Bey and Jeff Darling.

Changing of the guard

Last year saw a reshuffling of the deck when it came to the top spot in many of the organizations that influence life on and around the Seward Peninsula.

NSEDC seats several CEOs

By the end of 2008, Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. saw a familiar face at the helm when Janis Ivanoff was named chief executive officer. Ivanoff, who has worked for NSEDC since 1998 in various positions, was named CEO Dec. 6. Ivanoff, born and raised in Nome, replaced former Nomeite Bob Walsh. NSEDC's board of directors voted to not renew Walsh's contract at its third quarter meeting in November.

Walsh's time as CEO was short-lived. Walsh was voted into the position by the board of directors March 27, filling a void that had been left since Eugene Asicksik resigned the last day of the year in 2007. Asicksik's resignation, after serving as CEO since 1995, came after turbulence between him and the board of directors. Ivanoff served as interim CEO from the start of the year until Walsh was elected to the position in late March.

City Manager no longer interim

Another Nome-grown candidate took on a leadership role this year as Josie Bahnke was hired as Nome's City Manager. Bahnke, who was born in Nome, accepted the position as the city's top executive Oct. 15.

Bahnke's hiring gives some stability to the position, which has been filled by interim managers since Randy Romelesko's retirement in December 2007. At first, Nome's Parks and Recreation Director Chip Leeper filled in. Wasilla's Don Moore then put in a few months as interim manager, followed by Pete Hallgren of Delta Junction.

Bahnke's contract is set for two years.

Schools bid farewell to Lujan, hello to Luthi

Nome Public Schools also saw a changing of the guard in 2008. In early March, Rick Luthi was named to replace outgoing superintendent Stan Lujan. Before coming to Nome, Luthi worked as the Mat-Su Correspondence Principal, a principal in Unalakleet and assistant superintendent for the North Slope Borough.

Lake takes reigns at hospital

Norton Sound Health Corp. welcomed new leadership in March as Michael Lake moved into the top spot vacated by Trevor Colby. Lake previously ran a company that operated hospitals in rural parts of Florida and Mississippi. After a brief retirement, Lake traded the sunny south for a bit of adventure in the northern climes. Lake came aboard as NSHC advanced plans and preparation for its new hospital in Nome. As 2008 came to a close, the sound of pilings being driven into the ground for the new facility could be heard throughout Nome.

7: NOT YOUR NORMAL FAIRY TALE—Tara Schmidt plays Little Red Riding Hood during a Nome-Beltz Drama Club production.

8: IRON DOGS—Snowmachine racers motor out of Nome to start the second leg of the world's longest snowmachine race, the Iron Dog.

9: DOG DAYS OF SUMMER—The annual Nome River Raft Race brought out all sorts of competition.

Nome's top cop leaves town

In the blink of an eye, former Nome Police Chief Paul Burke's life was changed. A head-on car crash near Lake Tahoe in California nearly took the life of his daughter, Karen, in the fall. With his daughter facing a prolonged recovery and his wife, Michelle, living in Reno, Nev., to take care of her, Chief Burke opted to leave Nome to be closer to his family.

Sergeant Byron Redburn is filling the role of acting chief as the Nome Common Council considers former Alaska State Trooper Dallas Massie to serve as Nome's interim chief.

vaGold said the funds will be used to repay the principal and interest from a $20 million bridge loan from Auramet Trading LLC. That loan, originally due Dec. 29, was reworked last month to give NovaGold more time to repay. NovaGold also said it would direct funds toward exploration and development activities at the Galore Creek project in British Columbia and the Donlin Creek project near the Kuskokwim River in Alaska. Both are joint ventures, with NovaGold teaming with Barrick Gold Corp. at Donlin and with Teck Cominco at Galore.

NovaGold said the new money could also be used "to further examine, develop and, if warranted, re-activate the Rock Creek Mine near Nome."

NovaGold suspended operations at the open-pit mine just after Thanksgiving, citing troubles fulfilling regulatory requirements, a shortage of cash and problems with the consistency of the ore and its crushing unit. At that time, the company projected running out of cash by the end of 2008 if it could not find new means of raising capital. Van Nieuwenhuysse said at the time that the company would focus its efforts and resources on developing Donlin Creek.

Even with the new cash infusion, it appears NovaGold's attention will still mainly be directed away from Nome.

"We believe that Electrum's strategic alliance with NovaGold recognizes the tremendous value of the company's key assets—its 50 percent stakes in two of the largest undeveloped gold and copper-gold deposits in the world," said Van Nieuwenhuysse in the Jan. 2 press release. "This investment substantially strengthens NovaGold's balance sheet and provides funding for the company's on-going commitments to advance our key projects toward development. This source of funding will also allow the company to look at new opportunities that can provide future growth for the company."

With its financial outlook improved, it appears NovaGold will dodge a de-listing from the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Electrum is buying nearly 46.2 million equity units, each containing a common share and a four-year warrant to buy a share for $1.50. The units were priced at $1.30 each.

Electrum is a New York-based private firm that invests in precious metals exploration projects around the globe. As part of the deal, the firm has agreed to vote for the management's nominees to the board of directors, or to abstain, at NovaGold's 2009 annual general meeting.

in addition to the mine's tailings—is the source of a notice of violation sent by the state to NovaGold in mid-December.

Officials from the Alaska Department of Natural Resources are working with NovaGold to develop a plan to deal with the dam that was never meant to hold primarily water. The facility, rather, was meant to contain mainly tailings—waste rock from the mining process which are about 65 percent solid and 35 percent water—allowing water to evaporate out of the system.

"Because the Rock Creek TSF dam is not designed to operate as water storage structure with an operable spillway, it appears that the commissioning dam will exceed its approved operating limitations in a matter of time," writes State Dam Safety Engineer Charles Cobb in the notice of violation sent to NovaGold in December. "The unexpected seepage rates and the incomplete construction can affect the structural stability of the dam. These factors jeopardize the structural integrity of the dam which could eventually lead to a catastrophic failure and an uncontrolled release of solution water from the reservoir."

While details of a plan for the dam are being ironed out, both the state and NovaGold agree that getting water treated and out from behind the dam is the first order of business.

"The plan that's being pursued is to start the water treatment plant as soon as possible," said Jack DiMarchi of the Department of Natural Resource's Large Mine Permitting Team.

The treatment plant needs to be operational before any water can be drained from the facility. DiMarchi said NovaGold has projected to DNR a target date of Feb. 15 for having the plant up and ready. DiMarchi said the plant should be able to process approximately 350 gallons of water a minute. Initial designs called for a second phase for the plant which would increase its capacity to about 700 gallons per minute.

The water must be treated since it has come into contact with the tailings. It also contains chemicals used in the mill. The chemicals used to help extract gold from the rock, including cyanide, were not employed in great quantities since the mine was only in production for a short period. "They were only in operation for a few short weeks, so most of the water in the dam is mostly runoff water that they were collecting over time," DiMarchi said.

NovaGold President and CEO Rick Van Nieuwenhuysse argues that the state bears responsibility for much of that build up. "One of our primary objectives in the plan is to vacate the water from behind the tailings storage facility," Van Nieuwenhuysse wrote in an e-mail to The Nome Nugget. "As you are aware, this was primarily snow-melt run-off water that we were required by our permits to store behind the dam rather than let into the creek—which is what would have happened naturally."

Nevertheless, cyanide and other chemicals were routed to the tailings storage facility to mix with the runoff water, and the mixture must be treated before being pumped back into the ground via reinjection wells. "We will complete commissioning of our water treatment plant which allows us to treat the water to meet drinking and aquatic water quality standards before being injected back into the groundwater," Van Nieuwenhuysse said.

DiMarchi said the amount of cyanide in the facility is quite low, though it still appears to be above the standard required for release into the environment. "The mill only used cyanide for two weeks or so," DiMarchi said.

DiMarchi said the cyanide content needs to meet what is known as the "aquatic life standard" at 5.2 micrograms per liter. That equates to about 5.2 parts per billion to get a sense of the necessary dilution.

Aside from the cyanide, which was expected in the tailings storage facility, DiMarchi said preliminary testing appears to show that the water behind the dam is not unlike that outside the facility. "The initial results suggest that the chemistry [of the water behind the dam] is quite similar to the groundwater there," DiMarchi said.

DiMarchi said testing is ongoing at the mine to determine the chemistry of the water in the tailings storage facility, at the toe of the dam and in the groundwater. DiMarchi said three sets of samples are being taken a week until 20 sets have been accumulated.

The sampling, among other things, should determine how water is moving into, and perhaps through, the dam and the tailings storage facility.

A system is set up to catch water that seeps from the toe of the dam and pump it back into the tailings storage facility. Whether that water is making its way through the dam or under its liner, or is completely coming from a groundwater source beyond the toe of the dam is not completely known. DiMarchi said it is likely a combination of both. "Some of the preliminary information shows that seepage at the toe of the dam is a mixture of fresh water and [tailings storage facility] water making its way through the dam," he said.

"A substantially higher volume of seepage than anticipated in the design is being observed since the actual operating and construction scenario that occurred in 2007 and 2008," writes State Dam Safety Engineer Cobb in the notice of violation.

DiMarchi said if the chemical make up of the water being pumped back in matches that already in the storage facility, that would show that some water is indeed escaping the impoundment.

DiMarchi also said the amount of water behind the dam slowly appears to be increasing, the rate of increase does not appear to be equal to that which is being pumped in from the seepage collection system. That would further support the theory that some of the water being pumped in had already previously spent time behind the dam.

"[NovaGold] is faced with a paradox. If the majority of the current seepage is from the tailings pond, then the performance of the [tailings storage facility] containment system is outside of design expectations, and the ability of the Stage III seepage collection system to prevent a discharge is suspect," Cobb writes in the notice of violation. "If the majority of the seepage is fresh groundwater inflow, then the water balance is upset and engineer's estimates of seasonal flow variation are in error ... Excessive seepage through the foundation of the dam brings into question both the effectiveness of the containment system design and the stability of the embankment."

DiMarchi said a more definitive answer on just where the seepage water originates will have to wait until the water sampling is complete.

Structure of dam needs to be addressed

While the immediate concern with the dam is getting the water out from behind it, ultimately the state wants NovaGold to either abandon the structure while operations are suspended or redesign it to properly hold water.

The first option seems the most feasible. "Because the temporary closure period [of the Rock Creek Mine] is up to three years, Dam Safety believes that in the interest of public safety, the [tailings storage facility] must be dewatered and the dam configured such that no additional water impoundment can occur while the mine is closed," writes State Dam Safety Engineer Cobb in the notice of violation.

DiMarchi said this could be achieved, once the water is treated and emptied, by putting a notch in the dam to allow water to flow through, a process known as breaching. DiMarchi also said the tailings could be covered with surface material from the site to prevent water from coming into contact with exposed waste rock. "It would be like having a small creek flow through the dam," DiMarchi said. "The water that flowed through it would be separated from tailings."

Another option, though not as attractive, is to continually treat and pump water from the facility, DiMarchi said.

As of now, no formal plan for the dam has been agreed upon by the state and NovaGold.

Steeper than anticipated

The notice of violation sent to NovaGold also cites concern over the slope angle of the dam. Ultimately the dam was to have a horizontal to vertical ratio of 2.5 to 1. So for every foot of rise, the dam should extend outward for 2 1/2 feet.

As construction occurred, the state allowed the preliminary dam to be built at a ratio of 1.5 to 1 with the belief that the dam would only exist in that state for a brief period. As construction continued, the ratio would be corrected to align with the state's standards. The suspension of operations at the mine in November derailed the construction schedule for the dam.

"The structural stability of the commissioning dam has not been demonstrated to Dam Safety," Cobb wrote in the notice of violation.

"We don't know if it's unstable, but it is something other than we expected it to be long-term," DiMarchi said.

Nanook ballers ring in new year as champions

If the first three days of the year are any indication of what 2009 holds for Nome's boys basketball team, it should be a very good season for the Nanooks.

Nome wasted no time in starting the new year off right, easily dispatching three opponents in as many days to take home the title for the 2009 Anchorage Christian School's ACS Pepsi Invitational. The Nanooks defeated the Eielson Ravens 77-59 Jan. 3 to take home the title from the tournament held in Anchorage.

Tournament MVP Jesse Blandford led Nome with 25 points and nine rebounds in Saturday's game. Jeremy Head chipped in for 19 points while Christian Leckband put down a season-high 15 points. Mason Evans dished 10 assists to his teammates. In addition to Blandford, Head was named to the all-tournament team for his effort.

Nome bowled over its competition in the lead-up to the championship game. The Nanooks nearly hit the century mark in their debut match-up against Valdez on New Year's Day. Led by double-digit scorers Tim Sullivan, Head, Blandford and Mikey Wongittilin, Nome put up 99 points on the scoreboard compared to the Buccaneers' 38. All 10 Nanooks scored in the game.

Nome earned its spot in the championship game after defeating Barrow last Friday 84-48. Head and Blandford combined for 46 points to lead the Nanooks. Evans chipped in with 10.

In other awards given at the tournament, Nome earned honors for three-point shots.

Nome came home from the tournament with a 6-1 record and will next play in Unalakleet Jan. 9-10.

Next home event

The NBHS girls will host the Unalakleet Wolfpack on January 9-10.

On the horizon

The 2009 Nome Subway Showdown will take place Jan. 15-17. Teams in the tournament are Nome, Point Hope, Valdez, Noorvik's boys and Hooper Bay's girls.

National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration finds ribbon seals not threatened by global warming

By Diana Haecker

As the ice melts underneath most Arctic ice-dependant species' flippers or paws, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) announced on December 23 that ribbon seals should not be listed under the Endangered Species Act as a threatened species.

The Center for Biological Diversity submitted a petition to list ribbon seals as threatened based on the shrinking of sea ice needed by the animals to breed and rear their young. In the petition filed Jan. 2, 2008, the center argues that global warming results in the rapid melting of the seals' sea ice habitat. Other threats further endangering the seals include the Russian Federation's allowance of high levels of harvest, oil and gas exploration, and rising contaminant levels in the Arctic, according to the center. The warming trend and the unpredictability of sea ice coverage in the seals' habitat wreaks havoc in the seals' nursery, contends the center in its petition.

NOAA and scientists with the National Marine Fisheries Service issued a 12-month review of the petition and the condition of the ribbon seals, with the conclusion that winter ice will continue to exist and that ribbon seals are in no imminent danger.

"Our scientists have reviewed climate models that project that annual ice, which is critical for ribbon seal reproduction, molting and resting, will continue to form each winter in the Bering Sea and the Sea of Okhotsk where the majority of ribbon seals are located," said Jim Balsiger, NOAA's acting assistant administrator for fisheries.

Lawyers with the center disagree, saying that NOAA has used an overly optimistic climate model and that the findings are not based on good science, but on the political agenda of the Bush administration. "The denial of protection for the ribbon seal ignores the science on global warming and ignores the law. We are confident it will be overturned by either the courts or the new administration," said Brendan Cummings, oceans program director at the Center for Biological Diversity. "This decision is reflective of how badly the scientific integrity of NOAA and other federal agencies has been damaged under the Bush administration."

Scientists with the National Marine Fisheries Service and the National Marine Mammal Laboratory estimate that there are 200,000 ribbon seals roaming the Bering and Okhotsk seas. The 12-month finding concedes that the sea ice is more unpredictable and mentions that there is no study available that would clarify the crux of the matter, namely if the shrinking edge of the sea ice is affecting reproduction.

"There has not been, however, any study that would verify whether vital rates of reproduction or survival have been affected by these interannual variations in ice extent and breeding," reads the 12-month finding. "Whelping, nursing of pups, and maturation of weaned pups could conceivably be impacted in years when the ice does not extend as far south as it has typically in the past, because the breeding areas would be farther from the continental shelf break, a zone that seems to be a preferred foraging area during spring. If these conditions occur more frequently, as is anticipated from projections of future climate and sea ice conditions, reproduction and survival of young could be impacted."

An independent marine biologist and seal researcher with the University of West Virginia, Carlton Ray, said in a phone interview with The Nome Nugget that ribbon seals need the sea ice in the Bering Sea and the Sea of Okhotsk to give birth on the spring ice in late March, and nurse the pups until after three to four weeks when the babies molt and are ready to live on their own. By the end of April or early May, the mothers are then mating again and are pregnant for 11 months.

Ray said if the sea ice breaks up while the pups are losing their white baby coat, they are at the most vulnerable and cannot survive a swim in the water. "If the sea ice is disappearing before the molting process is over, most pups would not survive," Ray said. "It is probable that there will be a high mortality rate because the sea ice is disappearing too early."

Ray said he has studied ice seals surrounding St. Lawrence Island since 1958. Global warming, arctic thawing and the ramifications for humans, animals and plants alike is at the heart of the matter as conservationists try to force the government to act while business interests defend the extraction and use of fossil fuel. "The scientific consensus is that probably humans are at least partially the cause for greenhouse gases causing climate change," Ray said. He said that the downward spiral would accelerate for species like the ribbon seals, as the animals over a very short time would have to adapt to new survival strategies. "Ribbon seals for example don't come on land at all and it would be a big jump for them to come on land as an alternative to sea ice," Ray said.

Favoring a more precautionary approach, he said that he doesn't find any solace in the fact that NOAA included the ribbon seal as a "species of concern."

"What does that mean?" Ray said. "I would take the position that we should go as easy on their environment as we can. Increased boat traffic, oil and gas exploration in addition to the melting sea ice are just going to add to their stress."

The 12-month finding acknowledges the lack of data on how the shrinking sea ice affects the seals' reproduction, but assumes that population numbers haven't changed. "Lacking relevant data, the most conservative approach is to assume that the population has been at equilibrium with respect to conditions in the past, and that a change such as more frequent breeding farther from preferred foraging habitats will have some impact on vital rates," reads the document. "Even given the uncertainties, we conclude that the anticipated slight increase in frequency of years with low ice extent in April and May is likely to have some impact on reproductive rates."

The finding also recognizes increased ship traffic in the Bering Strait region or oil and gas activities during the ribbon seal breeding and molting seasons as additional threats.

"If such threats were to occur and cause a high rate of mortality or forgone reproduction, the species could be considered threatened or endangered in a significant portion of its range. However, none of the threats considered here is presently considered to be both sufficiently likely to occur and sufficiently high in impact, alone or cumulatively, to raise concern about them posing a risk of ribbon seal extinction or becoming endangered throughout a significant portion of its range," reads the 12-month finding.

Ray, disappointed with the federal agencies' finding, said that there needs to be a lot more done in the policy arena. "I don't think public discussions went far enough to address the scope of the problem," Ray said. "Something's got to be done, and unfortunately an [Endangered Species Act] listing is the only tool that may help."

The Center of Biological Diversity is a nonprofit conservation organization with the goal to protect endangered species and wild places, said its oceans program director Cummings. With a staff of lawyers and biologists, the center has filed Endangered Species Act petitions for other species including ringed, bearded and spotted seals as threatened under the act.

NOAA and NMFS found last fall that the petition presents substantial scientific and commercial information that the petitioned action of listing the ice seals may be warranted. Last year, in a finding contested by Gov. Sarah Palin and the State of Alaska, Secretary of the Interior Dirk Kempthorne announced the listing of the polar bear as threatened under the Endangered Species Act. "This was a very significant event," said Cummings in a phone interview with The Nome Nugget.

The center identified global warming as one of the leading causes for the loss of species, hence the center's focus on Arctic species. "The global warming problem is twofold: through unchecked carbon emissions, we lose the species, we lose villages, we lose subsistence," Cummings said. "The warming is happening right now, and we need to change our management to ensure that these species survive with less ice and at the same time try to slow down the warming trend."

Cummings said that the center sees the Endangered Species Act as the most effective tool to cause a sea change in policies while trying to protect what is so critical to Alaska Native peoples, subsistence. "I don't think the Endangered Species Act is a threat to subsistence, but instead I think of it as a shield that protects the species that Alaska Natives depend on," Cummings said. "I don't want to pretend that subsistence is not going to change, but global warming is bringing about changes in subsistence practices, and what we as people need to do is figure out how to protect endangered species in a rapidly changing climate."

Thomas William Rock Sr.

Obituaries

Thomas William Rock Sr.
March 29, 1982 to December 17, 2008
“A song of degrees.” Given to life on March 29, 1982, Suqkana was filled with love for all who encountered him. This love of many and every yearn to indulge in happiness. He was known to live in honesty, willingness, true understanding and respect thanks to his devoted mother, Irene Rock and father Daniel (See-took) Omedelena. On the 17th of December 2008, these purities; Thomas William Rock Sr. (T-dubbz) passed on upon family, friends, and strangers alike.
His hometown became Brevig

Mission for three years. He then moved to Nome with his mom at the age of four, attending school there to fifth grade. In the time being he welcomed living with a sister, Octaivia, and brother Chad Everest Wilson, to whom he enjoyed telling stories of his outside activities. Back in Brevig, he continued learning and welcomed sister AnnéCecilia into his life. Avgana liked hunting; later, he yondered out as time permitted. He shared his ventures, and his companions know this so. He made himself to be a great guide and company to those younger or yet those who wanted to abide with him as a hunter. He shared his food that he caught. Sometimes he hunted because the power to see truth made him notice that a loved one was in dire need of fresh food. If not working as a pipe-driver/lineman, his specialties were at home as a caring boyfriend to Carolyn Jean Olanna, and father to three charming children: Kimberly Grace, Molly Ann, and “Junior.” Yamanii helped clean, cook and tend to their siblings. When needed he maintained his equipment.

He joined the spirit world of all those who have passed on. Thomas W. Rock, Sr. leaves precious memories to everyone who accompanied him in this world of faith, kindness, prosperity and indulgence. Psalm 121; A song of degrees; I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help? My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber nor sleep. The Lord is thy keeper: The Lord is thy shade upon the right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even forever more.”

T-dubbz had been granted the serenity to accept the things he could not change. He had courage to change things he could, and the wisdom to know the differences. He made himself familiar in frequent

Trooper Beat

On December 12, WAANT Investigators contacted a 45-year-old female from Anchorage attempting to fly 8 bottles of Monarch Vodka and 1 bottle of Hennessy on Frontier Alaska to a 21-year-old male in Saint Michael. Investigation determined $200 had been sent by the male to the female through a Western Union wire transfer for the purchase of the alcohol. Saint Michael is a local option community where the sale or importation of alcohol is banned. The alcohol was seized and charges are being referred to the District Attorney's Office against the female and male.

On December 18, at approximately 10:00 a.m., AST received a report that the Mary's Igloo Office in Teller had been burglarized. The investigation is ongoing.

On December 19, at 7:58 p.m., Savoonga Village Public Safety Officer John Peratrovich received a report of a disturbance at a Savoonga residence. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Daisy Kiyuklook, 18, of Savoonga, for Assault IV, Disorderly Conduct, Resisting Arrest, and Misconduct Involving a Controlled Substance VI. Kiyuklook was remanded to AMCC.

On December 20, at 8:15 p.m., AST received a report of an assault that occurred in Gambell. AST is assisting the Gambell VPSO with the investigation.

On December 23, at 11:55 a.m., AST arrested a 15-year-old juvenile in Elim at the request of the Department of Juvenile Justice with an arrest warrant issued by the Nome Superior Court for Probation Violation. The juvenile was remanded to the Nome Youth Facility without incident.

On December 23, at approximately 5:30 p.m., Shishmaref VPSO Harley Huntington received a report that Clarence Tocktoo, 74, of Shishmaref, was overdue from moose hunting. The Shishmaref VPSO launched a hasty team, which located Tocktoo. Tocktoo had difficulties butchering his moose and was tired. All returned back to Shishmaref without incident.

On December 23, at approximately 8:47 p.m., Shaktoolik VPSO Nora Paniphtchuk received information of alcohol manufacturing at a residence in Shaktoolik. The investigation revealed that a resident of Shaktoolik had been manufacturing alcohol. Charges are pending.

On December 23, at approximately 9:45 p.m., AST received a report that Sean Yi, 17, of Nome, Janet Oquilluk, 15, of Nome, Jonathan Yi, 11, of Anchorage, and Lina Yi, 6, of Anchorage went for a drive at 3:00 p.m. and failed to return. Nome Volunteer Fire Department Search and Rescue sent out hasty teams on the road systems. At approximately 11:30 p.m., Search and Rescue located the truck and the occupants, stuck in a large snowdrift at approximately 15.5 mile Kougarak Rd. They had been stuck since approximately 4:00 p.m. All occupants were okay and returned to Nome. The Alaska State Troopers would like to thank the Nome Volunteer Fire Department Search and Rescue for their time and effort.

On December 24, at approximately 4:15 p.m., Norton Sound Health Corporation contacted Nome AST to report an infant death in Wales. Investigation determined that a five-month old infant stopped breathing and was taken to the health clinic. Resuscitation efforts failed. Next of kin were present at the time of the incident. No foul play is suspected and alcohol was not involved.

On December 27, at about 12:00 p.m., Nome AST received an anonymous tip that Jared Buffas was bringing marijuana to White Mountain. On December 27, at about 3:00 p.m. Buffas, 25, of White Mountain, was contacted at a local commercial airline and subsequently arrested for Misconduct Involving a Controlled Substance, Fourth Degree. Buffas was transported to AMCC where he was lodged with no bail.

On December 30, at approximately 5:25 p.m., Nome AST received a report that a juvenile female of a village located in the Norton Sound Region had been sexually assaulted during the fall of 2008. Due to the ongoing nature of this investigation information regarding location and dates will not be released at this time.

On December 31, at approximately 4:11 a.m., Nome AST received a report of an assault in the village of Diomedea. AST is responding to the village to investigate.

On December 31, at approximately 9:00 p.m. AST received a report that Ben Attatayuk, 48, of Brevig Mission, left Brevig Mission at 1:45 p.m. on December 31, and was on his way to Wales and was overdue. A hasty team was sent from Brevig Mission but only made it 15 miles out of Brevig Mission and were forced to turn around and return to Brevig Mission. The search was suspended due to white-out conditions. On January 1, 2009 the search resumed with ground searchers from Wales and Brevig Mission. On January 1, at approximately 4:00 p.m. Tin City reported to AST that Ben Attatayuk had arrived there. Attatayuk had been on his way to Wales when he encountered white-out conditions, got disoriented and thought that he was heading back towards Brevig Mission. No injuries were reported.

On January 2, 2009, at approximately 12:43 p.m., Nome AST received a report that a 4-year-old male had been sexually abused by a 15-year-old male juvenile in the winter months of 2008. Due to the ongoing nature of this investigation information regarding location and dates will not be released at this time.

Happy Birthday Nome Nugget!

Dear People of Nome,

Thank you for your loving support of my recently deceased father Job Kokochuruk. He meant so much to so many people and I thank you for helping celebrate his life at his memorial service on Saturday December 6 at 2:00 pm at the Nome Covenant Church.

I would like to thank Jo Putnam, Leora Labinski, and Flora Simon-Allen for putting together the collage of my Father’s photos. Thanks to Carolyn Johnson-Shubert and Maggie Couchi for writing the beautiful obituary on his behalf and printing it all for everyone to view. I would like to thank Johnny Johnson for always being there for my Dad, I know he thanks you too Johnny. Thanks especially to Harvey Fiskeaux for the Memorial Service, and his daughter for the photos on the big screen in Church. Also, I would like to thank Tula Mae for all the help getting the service together and for singing with her husband Ron at the service. Not forgotten at the service, all who came and sang in my Father’s native language, that was very beautiful. Thank you to Shirley Tisdole for all the beautiful flowers. Thank you to the Honorary Pallbearers Johnny Johnson, James A. Barefoot, Ron Huffman, Carl Ashenfelter and Jacob Ahwinona. Thanks goes out to all the Nome cab drivers that helped load my electric wheelchair. Thank you Leora for escorting me all over Nome to take care of matters. And thank you Nome for that pot luck. You do not know all the memories the tastes evoked.

I know there are some I have missed here, but thank you one and all for your loving support of my Father Job. Have a very Merry Christmas and a Blessed New Year.

Alice Kokochuruk

HOROSCOPES

January 8 - 14, 2009

Dec. 22–Jan. 19	You don't miss a thing, do you, Capricorn? You get an inkling that something is amiss and prepare yourself. Friendly banter at work lifts everyone's spirits.	Mar. 21–Apr. 19	It's a brand new year, Aries, and what better time to get your finances in order. Take up a savvy friend's offer to help and put that windfall to good use.	Jun. 22–Jul. 22	Marvelous, Cancer. An old friend drops by and hatches a plan to revive an old hobby. Go ahead and pursue it! You've got the time and the money.	Sept. 23–Oct. 22	Bliss is yours, Libra. You've got the golden touch this week. Enjoy! A memo at work sends the rumor mill into high gear. Steer clear of it. A deadline is moved up.
Jan. 20–Feb. 18	Check yourself, Aquarius. Don't divulge any more information than is necessary about a matter at work. Someone in the wings is watching and waiting for you to slip up.	April 20–May 20	Shh, Taurus. Hear that? No one is clamoring for your attention. Enjoy the peace and quiet. It won't last for long blast from the past returns with an intriguing question.	Jul. 23–Aug. 22	Drat, Leo. A home improvement project hits a snag. Call in the troops and work quickly to get over the hump. Saving for a rainy day pays off big at the end of the week.	Oct. 23–Nov. 21	Watch it, Scorpio. A friend may not have your best interest at heart. Take what they have to say with a grain of salt. The pace picks up at work, and a project is completed on time.
Feb. 19–Mar. 20	Solitude is in short supply these days, Pisces. Not to worry. Projects will wrap up sooner than thought, and the opportunity to get away for a while will appear. Seize it!	May 21–Jun. 21	Cheers, Gemini! A fantastic opportunity is headed your way. Make the most of it. A secret rendezvous with that special someone revives your love life.	Aug. 23–Sept. 22	It cannot go on any longer, Virgo. A family member's lack of judgment is apparent, and it's high time you expressed your feelings and offered your support.	Nov. 22–Dec. 21	You cannot believe it, Sagittarius, when letters from long ago make their way to you. Read them carefully. They may provide insight into a matter that has been bugging you for some time.

Community leaders aim to curb Nome's growing population of chronic inebriates

By Laurie McNicholas

The need for a community-wide effort to address a growing problem of chronic inebriates in Nome is gaining attention.

A representative of Homeward Bound, a 25-bed transitional living program in Anchorage that helps chronic homeless alcoholics reintegrate into the community, will describe the program Jan. 16 at 1 p.m. at a meeting of the Bering Strait Leadership Team in the Kawerak boardroom, and at 3 p.m. for local leaders at Nome Community Center. The Rural Alaska Community Action Program operates Homeward Bound.

Bering Strait Leadership Team members are administrators of regional organizations that include Kawerak, Norton Sound Health Corp., Bering Straits Native Corp., the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus, Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. and Bering Strait Regional Housing Authority.

Two months ago Michael Lake, NSHC's president and CEO, told the Nome Common Council that treatment of increasing numbers of alcoholic patients was taxing the hospital's emergency room medical staff, at times overcrowding the inpatient facility and creating problems in caring for critically ill patients. He projected that alcohol-related ER visits would grow from 486 in 2006 to 585 by the end of 2008.

He proposed that the City establish an alcoholic detention center staffed with a physician's assistant or nurse at peak times to screen intoxicated

NSEDC evens up with IRS, state to the tune of $12.4 million

By Laurie McNicholas

Dan Harrelson, president and chairman of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., announced payment of the company's federal and state tax obligations in the following -mail message Jan. 8.

"During our discussions yesterday at the Nome Nugget Newspaper, I gave you an estimate off the top of my head on an amount of our tax payments," Harrelson wrote. "I've checked with staff and after following the guidance from our legal advisors, for 2005-2008 NSEDC has paid federal taxes, penalties and interest of approximately $10.2 million and state taxes, penalties and interest of approximately $2.2 million. We are pleased that this issue has been resolved and we have taken the necessary steps, as laid out by our legal advisors, to ensure we are in compliance. This guidance included the formation of our wholly owned for-profit subsidiary—Siu Alaska Corporation."

NSEDC is one of six Community Development Quota groups in western Alaska, and has nonprofit tax-exempt status as a social welfare organization under 501c4 of the Internal Revenue Code. Such organizations annually file a Form 990 informational return with the IRS. Gross income from a business reported on the return that is not substantially related to the tax-exempt purpose of the organization, other than the need for funds, is subject to unrelated business income tax (UBIT).

Common Council gives nod to interim police chief

Dallas Massie could start as early as Jan. 19

By Tyler Rhodes

The Nome Common Council approved the hiring of Dallas Massie as the city's interim police chief for a six-month period at its regular meeting Jan. 12.

The decision to bring Massie aboard to fill the void left by former chief Paul Burke was unanimous. Massie, a former Deputy Commander of the Alaska Bureau of Investigation and Alaska State Trooper who lives in Wasilla, is slated to start work in Nome Jan. 19.

The contract is set to expire June 17 or when a permanent chief is hired.

Under the approved contract, Massie will earn $6,500 a month with no provision for overtime pay. The city will also provide Massie with a furnished apartment and vehicle. The contract also calls for the city to provide for transportation and moving expenses to Nome, a provision that sparked some discussion amongst the council.

Councilman Jon Larson, participating in the meeting telephonically, expressed concern over the wording of the clause. The contract reads, "City shall reimburse employee for actual moving expenses and return transportation an

Dear Editor,

I just wanted to respond to a letter that was printed in the Jan 8th edition regarding Alaska’s revenue generation. Mr. Ivanoff’s statement “If this is not happening, I think people who oppose any development mining projects are digging a financial hole for the communities and state, because up to 80 percent of state revenue comes from oil and mining businesses” is not entirely factual and I’d like to know what his source of information was for his numbers. Also, was he including in our local government’s revenue? Has he explored what our local business profit was from mining? I think that would be a better estimate of what mining brings to and takes away from our town.

According to what I could find online at various sources, our revenue is based mainly on oil and gas. It should be noted that our Alaskan fishing industry is our main exporter.

Alaska has been ranked 45th in gross state product since 2004. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_U.S._states_by_GDP_\(nominal\)) <http://www.bea.gov/>

“The 2005 gross state product was $39.9 billion, 45th in the nation. Its per-capita GSP for 2006 was $43,748, 7th in the nation. The oil and gas industry dominates the Alaskan economy, with more than 80% of the state’s revenues derived from petroleum extraction. Alaska’s main export product (excluding oil and natural gas) is seafood, primarily salmon, cod, Pollock and crab.” <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alaska>

“Oil revenue contributed 93% of the unrestricted FY 2008 revenues; in FY 2009 and FY 2010, oil will contribute 90% and 88%, respectively.”<http://www.revenue.state.ak.us/Press%20Releases/08-013%2012-9-2008%20RSB.pd>

For the State of Alaska, government revenue per a 2007 report, mining contributes a small fraction of our government’s revenue.

“Our current forecast calls for state revenue from mining to decrease somewhat in the near future as minerals prices decrease. We expect state revenue from mining to begin to rise by 2012, and reach $110.9 million by FY 2017, still below the current high of $151.6 million. We currently forecast that GPUR from mining will reach 5.5% of total GPUR in FY 2017, up from 2.9% in FY 2007.” <http://www.tax.alaska.gov/programs/documentviewer/viewer.aspx?255>

The statement above is only for our state government. It doesn’t reflect local business and government numbers. I believe that the hope of our state government is that mineral resources will help offset the decline in oil revenue for the future as our reserves fall.

At this point in time mining provides a small fraction of state revenue, which is what Mr. Ivanoff is quoted as having lumped in with our oil industry.

If we encourage our mining companies to build strong foundations from which to work safely, it is possible for them to be much more sustainable. But it needs to proceed safely in order to be a stable economic resource. I believe that this is what our permitting agencies are trying to achieve.

Thank you,
Karen McLane

Dear Editor,

I am using the written message for all of our state politicians, policy makers and especially those who control our ‘Permanent (not very) Fund.’ Has anyone contemplated the billions of dollars that has gone away on Wall Street?

No matter how careful you (they?) have been with our permanent fund and its investment, I hope that you are thinking of other ways to invest our funds. It is very disheartening to see our villages going without proper law enforcement and many benefits taken for granted in our larger cities. We in villages must live with a very high cost of living. When the politicians come to rural Alaska, they always say “vote for me” and I will see that your living standards will be improved.

I have watched the process unfold here in Alaska since statehood and have seen depression here in Golovin. Well, since the advent of Statehood I have also been lucky enough to be employed seasonally as we here in Golovin developed our community to what it now is. We have built our City infrastructure from nothing to a viable City Government and its facilities. At least we now are in the process of Water and Sewer development. We have electricity thanks to Revenue Sharing and such things as Native Corporations and CDQs, etc.

Governor Hammond had a wonderful dream, which has come around to being a reality for our villages. No doubt all of us have benefited in one way or another to improve our way of life. Yet there is so much more potential when you think of all the other possibilities that exist with our oil wealth while it is still coming in.

It is sad to have seen us hurt so much by the great losses on Wall Street. I think and wish that we could have had the chance to direct those funds to more infrastructure and improvements in third world Alaska.

We should had done this—should have invested in developing alternative energy or at least help our rural communities more in their efforts (if any) to work at that. Now is the time to do it. Alyeska Pipeline is running out of time—at least there is the possibility of a gas pipeline. Well, there goes our energy again—we still are not realizing the full benefit of our rural resources being developed—we foolishly continue burning fuel oil for heat and pay exorbitant prices for gasoline. It’s now becoming a fact that people in village must decide to be warm or hungry! Maybe being warm and eating less will help us survive somehow in the long run. Since I have heard an Eskimo say, “shoot, a dollar bill won’t even burn well to start a fire.” I believe that. With the CDQ program also running into diminished quotas, what will happen when that runs out?

Wind energy, I think must be developed in villages—we cannot even now afford the cost of shipping oil and petroleum products to village. I know transportation is always a big cost for everything. At least we wouldn’t have to transport wind—it is here, there and everywhere. Design and performance have improved a lot since territorial days when few people had “farm windmills” to provide lights for their own home use. Two or three units per village would greatly improve our situation by lessening our dependence on oil which comes from our natural settings and we must buy back as it is refined and sold to us at sky high prices.

Such things as nuclear and hydro-electric power cannot work in Alaska because of the immense distances to transport, as is the case with all of our commodities and necessities. We used to eat healthier foods before the cash economy took hold of our existence—witness more pizza, hamburgers, pop and everything else that medical science finds wrong with what we inject into our bodies, but that in another story. Well, in other words—“help us now to help ourselves” and quit throwing money at us in the form of energy assistance—I already feel guilty enough sending CO₂ into our atmosphere and contributing to the global warming effect. Wind energy has ZERO emissions and does not contribute to our community noise pollution.

Please consider.

Dear Editor,

Before we go head-on into the new year, I would like to say a few words.

Now, we know that we are all conscious human beings. Consciousness is being aware. Perhaps some of you have seen or heard of some animals playing dead when they cannot get away or fight. Unconsciousness is the same thing. We cannot run from or fight our bosses or we’ll loose our jobs, so we turn to drugs, alcohol, cigarettes and even food, like pop and chips. Addictions are human beings’ way of being unconscious. Unconsciousness is the mother of all addictions and the father of all suicides.

Some of you may remember being a toddler. Remember always asking questions about things you don’t understand. Toddlers have this pure honest love of self. That is why we love them so much. We are always teasing them lovingly. Maybe some of you noticed that when you

Safety Net Needed

Two Nomeites froze to death this winter. This should not have happened. We should be ashamed. We have thousands of bucks to spend on fireworks and celebrations, but the city purse is pinched shut when it comes to the welfare of the street people. We can shake our heads and tisk tisk our tongues, but when it gets down to the bottom line we are our brothers’ keepers. We may not approve of the lifestyle of the habitual street drunk, but we have an obligation to see that our fellow human beings do not freeze to death in our streets.

We need a shelter. Call it a sleep-off center or a drunk tank. Several years ago we had a facility called the Turning Point. It was well used but its money ran out. We still need a Turning Point. We currently relegate the drunks to the hospital emergency room. They stumble in, or are hauled in my police, flop down on a gurney and take up medical care and facilities needed for true emergencies. Often the police haul them off to jail. Jail is not a place to shelter a person because they are drunk. The jail facility is for prisoners, not folks who need to get a bath, sober, and three squares. The expense of using the hospital and the jail as drunk tanks is hard to justify. We need to re-establish a sleep-off center. Every organization in town should fund the facility. Booze taxes, bed taxes, charitable donations, non-profit corporations, private businesses, churches and bars should ante up some bucks.

We have seen alcohol abuse ruin many lives. Yet it is a problem many Nomeites find easy to ignore. We have a social and moral obligation to solve the problem and keep our fellow Nomeites from freezing to death in our streets. We need a functional safety network to help the recovering alcoholic and to prevent the inebriates from hurting themselves and their families. A drunk tank does not have to be fancy, just clean and warm. It would also show that Nome cares for even the most hard to tolerate fellow human beings. — N.L.M. —

Retired computers can be safely recycled

By Anna Hahn
Within the City of Nome the facilities to recycle newspaper, white paper and aluminum are provided by none other than the City itself. The only thing that seems to be overlooked is the service to recycle computers and electronics.
Old, useless, obsolete computers suffocate Nome. They clutter office buildings, schools and homes. Placing them in the landfill could potentially damage the environment and possibly exposes private information. Where and how should old products such as computers, TVs and gadgets go post use?

A recycling company in Anchorage, Alaska (and Seattle, Washington) called Total Reclaim recycles computers and other such electronics. They state that computer monitors and TVs have lead on their printed circuit boards. Cadmium is found in chip resistors and semi conductors. Mercury is in all florescent lamps, printed circuit boards, laptops and LCD screens. Brominated flame retardants are found in some plastics in some products and again specifically on the printed circuit board. All of the stated substances can damage the environment when placed in a dumpsite or landfill.

Sending products to Total Reclaim costs $10 for 15 and 17-inch monitors and 35¢ per pound for computers and peripherals.
An alternative salvaging company is Apple, the computer manufacturers. They recycle computers (of any brand), iPods, cell phones and land-line phones free of charge. Simply send the old products to the company and they will dispose of the items responsibly.
Finally, there is Sim Recycling Solutions. However the nearest facility is in California. The company accepts TVs, radios, computers and most electronics. For a fee of $50, Sim will provide the shipper with a box for electronics for recycling. It measures 22"x22"x24" and is not to exceeded a weight of 69 pounds. An additional fee will be put into place if it balances over that weight.

Investors pump another $15M into NovaGold

NovaGold Resources Inc., the owner and operator of the idled Rock Creek Mine, announced Jan. 6 that it has received an additional $15 million in investment.
The news comes on the heels of a Jan. 2 announcement of a $60 million deal with Electrum Strategic Resources LLC. The $75 million cash infusion comes as the junior mining company faced the prospect of empty coffers.
Both deals are based on the same terms, with units offered at $1.30 each. Each unit contains one common share of NovaGold and a purchase warrant for an additional share at $1.50 per share. The warrants are good for four years.
NovaGold had mentioned in its Jan. 2 release that it was in discussions with other investors for the additional $15 million available in the offering. The company did not specifically identify the party or parties that ultimately took NovaGold up on the offer, listing them only as "institutional investors."

NovaGold said the $15 million would be directed toward "general corporate purposes."
Both the deal with Electrum and the additional investors are subject to certain provisions and the approval of the Toronto Stock Exchange and the NYSE Alternext. The transactions are to be completed concurrently, NovaGold said.
NovaGold is also having its shares reviewed by the Toronto Stock Exchange through a delisting review. According to its Jan. 2 press release announcing the Electrum deal, NovaGold said the review would come as a consequence of relying on a financial hardship exemption offered by the exchange.

In that release, NovaGold said it invoked that hardship exemption in its offering to Electrum by giving the firm a 30 percent stake in NovaGold without a shareholder vote. Under the Toronto Stock Exchange's rules, an offering of common shares in excess of 25 percent of the current and outstanding shares would normally require shareholder approval.
A company spokesperson said NovaGold believes it is—and was—not at risk of being delisted. NovaGold said in the Jan. 2 release that it believes upon completion of the offering it will be in compliance with all of the exchange's listing requirements.

Citgo executes a welcomed flip-flop

Free heating oil program back online for villages, Nome's fate in program still unknown

By Tyler Rhodes

In a quick about-face, Venezuelan-owned Citgo Petroleum Corp. confirmed Jan. 7 that its free heating oil program would continue.

The announcement came as welcome news as rural Alaska has been paying record prices for its heating fuel and temperatures throughout the state have nose-dived far below zero ever since the start of the new year.

Whether or not that assistance will be extended to all the fuel customers of Nome, however, remains to be determined.

It appeared that the program risked being scuttled on Jan. 5 when Citizens Energy Corp., the Massachusetts firm that administers the program, reported that falling oil prices had forced Citgo to take a second look at the assistance which has meant a couple months of free heat for many rural Alaskans for the past two years.

Two days later, Citizens Energy and Citgo released a joint press release confirming Citgo's continuation of the program that delivers up to 100 gallons of free heating oil for low-income and Native households across the nation.

"This decision is the result of a strong commitment and a big effort on the part of Citgo and our shareholder in light of the current global financial crisis and its impact on the oil industry in general," Citgo President and CEO Alejandro Granado said in a press release.

Kawerak Inc. administers the heating oil program in the region around Nome. Dawn Salesky, Kawerak's vice president of Education, Employment and Training, said Jan. 8 the organization has yet to receive official notice oil. Salesky said most of those households travel to the fuel vendor to receive their oil. She said the vouchers are kept at the vendor with the household representative signing the vouchers each time they receive fuel until they have received the full 100 gallons.

Nome, as a whole, was included in the program not meet that threshold. According to data from the 2000 U.S. Census, Nome's population of 3,505 is nearly 59 percent Native. "Nome was just kind of thrown in last year," Salesky said.

As for the village program, Salesky said it would get underway as soon as funding arrives. "We usually start the program when we get the money in the bank," Salesky said. "Last year we started really late, in February, for the village program."

Alaska Inter-Tribal Council Interim Executive Director Steve Osborne said all his organization knew for certain as of Jan. 12 was that the program was back on. "I spoke with Citizens' Energy late [in the first full week of January] and the program specifics are not yet finalized," Osborne said in an e-mail to The Nome Nugget. "I do know that we should have more concrete information this month. Outside of that, the only information being released is that the program is going to continue."

Salesky said as soon as the money appears for this year's program, Kawerak is ready to go for the 15 villages. "We have household lists for all the vendors and tribes for each community," she said. She said if a household is not on a vendor's list, the vendor should call Kawerak to confirm their eligibility.

"Nome was just kind of thrown in last year."

that the program is a go for the villages in the region, let alone Nome. For that matter, she said Kawerak didn't receive the earlier word of the program potentially being scuttled either.

For the past two years, Kawerak has set up vouchers for each household in the 15 villages it covers. Those vouchers allowed each household to receive a total of 100 gallons of heating for the first time last year. "It was a total surprise for us to get the Nome program," Salesky said.

Salesky said Kawerak had to ask Citgo directly that Nome be included in the program.

amount equal to the price of two round-trip tickets between Anchorage and Nome."

"This seems to be awfully open-ended," he said. Larson lobbied to place some sort of limitation on the moving expenses the city would cover, "so he doesn't fly a car up here or something."

Councilman Jerald Brown questioned whether the wording simply applied to the cost of an airline ticket to Nome and not the shipping of other goods. The discussion turned to changing the wording to apply only to airfare when Councilwoman Mary Knodel argued that the city should provide more. "I think that it's only right to give him some moving expenses," Councilwoman Mary Knodel said. "Maybe he's got a bicycle he wants to bring?"

Before approving the contract, the council settled on stipulating the city would cover moving expenses, in addition to airfare, of up to $1,000.

In the quest to find a permanent police chief, City Manager Josie Bahnke said the city has commenced advertising for the position and is in the process of forming a selection committee that would be approved by the council.

Since Burke's departure in late December to be closer to family, Sgt. Byron Redburn has filled in as acting chief.

Seeking funds

Bahnke also reported on the city's effort to secure federal funding for Nome through President-elect Obama's proposed economic stimulus package. Bahnke said she and Nome Joint Utility System Manager John Handeland submitted six proposals to Sen. Mark Begich, who requested project proposals from throughout the state be sent to him.

In her report, Bahnke said it appears unlikely that any earmarks will make it into the package. Nevertheless, a list of six projects totaling $170.6 million was put together. In order of importance, listed were a new Norton Sound Regional Hospital at $150 million; phase II of the Nome Public Safety Building at $2.25 million; alternative energy in the form of wind generation at $10 million; dredging of the port's inner harbor at $1 million; the renovation of the Nome Recreation Center/emergency shelter at $1.3 million; and construction of a power distribution line at $6 million.

The council had requested the city to seek additional federal lobbying services to maximize its chances of receiving funding from the recovery package. Bahnke and Handeland met with the city's two lobbyists, Wendy Chamberlain and Larry Markley, by telephone Jan. 8 and 9.

Bahnke reported that all parties in discussion of the matter agree that the funding will be directed through block grants to federal agencies. With earmarks apparently out of the question, Bahnke said the city was advised at this time that additional lobbying was likely unnecessary.

Councilman Anderson opined that earmarks or not, there still will be federal funds in the offering. "They might call it a different name, but it's still the same thing," Councilman Anderson said. "It's still money being appropriated."

Closer to home, Bahnke said she, Mayor Denise Michels and Handeland will travel to Juneau Jan. 27 to present the city's legislative priorities to state leaders. She said the list of priorities is being finalized. The list was developed in mid-November with input from the council, Nome Joint Utility System, Nome Public Schools, city lobbyists and the public.

Bahnke also reported that the group will go to Washington, D.C., Feb. 23 to meet with the state's congressional delegation.

Update from the schools

Nome Public Schools Superintendent Rick Luthi told the council that the district is starting to form its fiscal year 2010 budget. He said as student numbers are thinning, fewer state dollars will be available to the district. "We want the process to be a very public process," he said.

Luthi described the work on the budget at this moment as "very preliminary."

Luthi also briefed the council on efforts to collaborate with the Bering Strait School District. Luthi said a joint meeting between the two boards would be held in Teller in the future. He also said the two districts are exploring the possibility of collaborating on in-services, supply purchases and potentially the sharing of staff.

The superintendent also informed the council that the district had received a letter from the Nome Education Association requesting that contract negotiations be open.

Nome-Beltz High School Principal Janeen Sullivan invited the council to attend a public meeting that was held Jan. 14 on Rachel's Challenge, a program aimed at improving a school's climate.

Utility report

Utility manager Handeland reported to the council that Nome Joint Utility System has been working on its year-end budget closeout. Handeland said the utility is working on its new budget, which will be addressed at its Jan. 20 meeting.

Handeland also said he will meet with engineers next week to work on plans for water and sewer projects for next year. He said the utility has some money for projects, but is also looking for U.S. Department of Agriculture funding. He said specific projects would be targeted in the area of Sixth and Seventh avenues with updates to the pump house behind the Nome Recreation Center, as well as work on a segment of the Moonlight Springs water transmission line.

Other council business

• Nome Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Mitch Erickson informed the council that the Nome Visitors Center will soon receive a new interior paint job. He noted that the center is not set up to be an Internet hot spot, allowing visitors to come in and check their e-mail. He said the center plans to have a computer available to visitors as well. "We're just trying to make it a good spot for visitors to come," Erickson told the council.

• The council passed the first reading of several ordinances regarding budget amendments on to a second reading for its Jan. 26 meeting. The budgets with proposed amendments are the municipal general fund, capital projects fund, special revenue fund, Port of Nome fund and the construction capital projects fund.

• The council finished its meeting in a closed session to discuss personnel matters regarding the interim police chief; legal and financial matters in regard to NovaGold, the owner of the suspended Rock Creek Mine; and the labor contract negotiations between the city and the Alaska Public Employees Association.

New rules likely for next year’s musk ox hunt

Slain and wasted animals mar first hunt in game management unit 22(C) under new regulations

By Tyler Rhodes

A less-than-stellar debut of a new musk ox hunt in the Nome region this month has an Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologist shaking his head.

ADF&G Area Biologist Tony Gorn said there were several disappointments in how this first musk ox hunt under new rules was carried out. “Fifteen percent of the harvest was something other than what we wanted,” Gorn said. “Some were cows, some were animals that were shot and not recovered for whatever reason.”

Citing that the quota would likely be reached by the end of the day, ADF&G closed the subsistence musk ox hunt in a portion of Unit 22(C) by emergency order Jan. 8.

A quota of 34 bulls in the unit was open to Alaska residents who applied for a permit by Dec. 31. The hunt began Jan. 1.

As of Jan. 12, Gorn said Fish and Game knew of 33 musk oxen that had been killed. Of those, 29 were bulls, three were cows and one was a calf of which the sex could not be determined. Three shot musk oxen—the calf and two cows—were left in the field to waste, he said. According to the Alaska State Troopers, one cow and the calf were found near the Nome-Teller Highway approximately one mile from each other. The Trooper report said the two incidents were likely unrelated.

Another cow was shot and wounded during the hunt. As far as Fish and Game knows that cow is still alive.

“The idea that hunters are shooting cows in a bulls hunt is disappointing,” Gorn said. “The other disappointing thing is presumably several muskoxen that were killed died of a pass-through shot, [meaning] that animal was standing behind the intended target.” He said the pass-through shootings are particularly distressing since a principal tenet of ethical hunting is to be aware of what is behind your target and to not fire unless you have a clean shot.

The animals left in the field and the other harvested cow were counted against the hunt quota.

Fish and Game have guides to identifying the sex of musk ox both in its office and online. “There were definitely problems with hunters not identifying individual musk oxen, which is very discouraging to me. If you spend 10 to 15 minutes looking at pictures, you’ll be able to tell not only the sex, but the age class,” he said. “This is not a hunt that should catch you by surprise.”

Alaska Wildlife Trooper Brian Miller said five investigations have been initiated in relation to the hunt. “All the cases either involved shooting the wrong sex animal, wanton waste or failure to submit to trophy destruction,” Miller said.

Hunters who were taking animals out of the area were required to cut off the last three inches on the end of the musk ox’s horns. The requirement is an effort to prevent individuals from just seeking a trophy in what was designed as a subsistence hunt.

Miller said two individuals reported themselves to the Troopers.

One was Matt Slingsby of Nome, who according to a Trooper dispatch, was issued a citation Jan. 3 for taking a cow in the permit hunt. Slingsby brought the cow back to town, cleaned it and turned it over to the Troopers.

Miller declined to name the second hunter who self-reported until he has met with the district attorney to determine charges to be filed.

Another Trooper dispatch said Travis Murphy of Nome was issued a misdemeanor citation Jan. 9 in regard to trophy destruction. The Troopers assert that Murphy sent the head of a musk ox of a legally harvested animal out of Game Management Unit 22 without having Fish and Game personnel first cut the horns.

Miller, who spent the first few freezing days of the hunt camped out in the field, also said he issued several warnings to hunters. Most of those warnings were for failure to leave evidence of sex attached to the animal or a failure to attach the required metal band to the animal—a process known as sealing.

Previous musk ox hunting opportunities in the area came by way of a restrictive Tier II permit, which was awarded to hunters based on a point system. This year’s hunt was conducted under a registration permit, which simply required Alaska residents to register before partaking in the hunt.

The more liberal structure of the hunt perked the attention of both locals and hunters from other corners of the state. High interest and a limited quota made for a bit of a race when the hunt opened. “There was definitely a feeling of a derby hunt on January first,” Gorn said.

Gorn said that while 84 percent of the permits went to locals, 47 percent of the opening day harvest of 19 musk oxen was attributed to out-of-town hunters. Most of the musk oxen killed throughout the entire hunt were harvested west of Nome.

While Gorn said it’s too early to detail for certain all the possible changes that could be implemented for next year’s hunt, he did note some differences that are likely to be enacted. “The encouraging thing is that under the current regulatory regime, there are changes we can make to the hunt to improve it next year,” Gorn said.

He said to decrease the hunting pressure in just one spot, the registration permit will probably cover additional hunt areas. “So if hunters pick up that one permit, they’ll be able to hunt in three areas instead of one. So we hope that will spread out some of the hunting pressure,” he said.

Gorn also said the amount of trophy destruction required for those taking the animal out of the Nome area will likely be more substantial.

A 2007 population estimate put the musk ox population in Unit 22(C) at 445 animals. The quota for the hunt was established by targeting an 8 percent harvest rate for bulls in the unit.

“When the Board of Game adopted this hunt a lot of changes were made in a short period of time, and we knew that this wasn’t perfect,” Gorn said. “Even so, I was hopeful that it would go better than it did.”

Another closure

The final available musk ox from a quota of 16 in the “Remainder” portion of Unit 22(D) was harvested last weekend, Gorn said.

“That season opened in August,” Gorn said. “It just kind of trickled along.”

Gorn did not report any abnormalities occurring in that hunt.

Moose hunt at slower pace

The results of another big-game hunt opened in the area Jan. 1 have been much quieter. As of Jan. 12, only one moose harvest had been reported to ADF&G.

A quota of eight bulls is set for a registration hunt in the southwest and Kuzitrin River drainage portions of Unit 22(D). The hunt is set to close Jan. 31 or once those eight bulls are harvested. The hunt was opened after the quota was not met in the fall hunt.

The subzero weather experienced the first week of January could have contributed to the hunt’s slow start. Also, the hunt area is farther from Nome than the musk ox hunt in 22(C), likely leaving hunters from the area’s population center less willing to travel the distance in the cold.

NSEDC 2007 financials still have not seen light of day

By Laurie McNicholas

The Western Alaska Community Development Quota Program section of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act requires each of the six CDQ entities to provide annual reports to the entity's member villages summarizing financial operations for the previous calendar year, including general and administrative costs and compensation levels of the top five highest paid personnel.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. is a CDQ entity that represents 15 member villages in the Bering Strait Region. In 2008 NSEDC did not comply with the federal law cited above; the corporation did not provide an annual financial report for 2007 to its member villages.

The Nome Nugget asked Dan Harrelson, NSEDC's board chairman and president, to explain why the corporation has not issued an annual financial report for 2007. He replied as follows in an e-mail Jan. 8:

"NSEDC's 2007 annual report is nearly complete. We've sent notifications to our communities that we're awaiting the completion of the audit of our financials for inclusion in our report; the 2007 annual report will be disseminated shortly thereafter. We've historically published our audited balance sheet so this won't look completely new to the communities. However, we've engaged a new firm to complete audits for us and the process has taken longer than we've anticipated. We look forward to wrapping it up quickly."

Audit delay puzzling

Last July when the NSEDC board held a quarterly meeting in Nome, the firm's former Controller Tasha Huffman met in a closed session with the finance committee to discuss a delay in the 2007 audit report by KPMG, a firm that had prepared the corporation's annual audit reports and Form 990 informational returns to the IRS for years. NSEDC has a nonprofit tax-exempt status as a social welfare organization under 501c4 of the Internal Revenue Code.

In a public session following the closed committee meeting, Huffman said KPMG had completed 90 percent of the 2007 audit report. The finance committee recommended that the full board adopt a resolution to have Altman, Rogers and Co. prepare NSEDC's 2007 IRS return, and the board did so. Anchorage-based Altman, Rogers performs management, book-keeping, tax and audit work.

Prior to voting on the motion, board member Elvina Naranjo of Koyuk asked why the finance committee recommended switching from KPMG to Altman, Rogers. Harrelson said KPMG has been slow in audit preparation and unrelated business income tax issues are involved.

In September the Nugget asked Bob Walsh, who was then NSEDC's chief executive officer, when the 2007 annual report would be complete. He said he had seen drafts of it on his desk.

The finance committee again held a lengthy closed session at the NSEDC board meeting in November in Nome. During a break in the session, the Nugget asked Walsh about the status of the 2007 annual report. He said he needed the board's approval regarding an issue on the finance committee agenda, and that he expected the board to approve it and clear the way to print the report. When the finance committee ended the closed session, its members adopted a motion by Don Stiles of Nome to recommend that the full board direct staff to fill in blanks in the 2007 annual report as instructed. Nugget staff did not attend the board's vote on the recommendation.

During a meeting with Nugget staff Jan. 7 in Nome, Harrelson said the NSEDC board had decided at the November meeting to have Altman, Rogers prepare the 2007 audit report instead of KPMG. Accompanying Harrelson to the meeting was Simon Kinneen, NSEDC's CDQ harvest manager, who offered to explain off the record why certain topics and information are too confidential to address on the record. The Nugget's editor and publisher Nancy McGuire declined Kinneen's offer.

Nugget staff raised questions about NSEDC with an understanding that Harrelson and Kinneen could choose to listen, but were not expected to answer if the topic were confidential. One such question was, "Why did you wait so long to have Altman, Rogers do the audit instead of KPMG?"

The question is especially puzzling because a KPMG representative told members of the NSEDC finance committee in February 2007 that the corporation's current activity is related to its tax-exempt purposes and is non taxable. Through subsequent consultation with a tax attorney, NSEDC learned that some of its current income is unrelated to the tax-exempt purpose of the organization and is taxable. (NSEDC recently resolved its tax issues with the IRS. See the cover story.)

Nome seafood plant manager resigns

By Laurie McNicholas

Josh Osborne reportedly has resigned as operations manager for Northern Norton Sound Seafood Processing in Nome effective Jan. 15. NNSSP and Southern Norton Sound Seafood Processing at Unalakleet are owned by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

Sources who have asked not to be identified provided the following information about Osborne's career. He started work as a salmon processor at the Unalakleet plant when he was 16 years old. A couple of years later he fished in Bristol Bay for a season before returning to Nome to work at the NSSP halibut plant.

Osborne was promoted to manager of the Nome processing plant in 2002, and a couple of years ago he was named NSSP operations manager for both Nome and Unalakleet.

Last year NSEDC split NSSP into two companies, with Osborne as manager of NNSSP and William (Middy) Johnson as manager of SNSSP.

Osborne did not respond to the Nugget's request for an interview.

wholly owned subsidiary corporation to hold assets. The company then moved gradually—and for the most part secretly—toward formation of a for-profit subsidiary, Siu Alaska Corp. Siu was listed as a business corporation with the State of Alaska effective June 5 at the same Anchorage address as the NSEDC headquarters office. Janis Ivanoff is the registered agent for the company.

At some point it was decided that (1) a seven-member board of directors—three from within NSEDC and four from outside the company—would govern Siu's activities; and (2) directors would serve for varying terms—Class A seats for one year, Class B for two years and Class C for three years.

NSEDC staff reportedly polled their board members individually by phone to elect the three NSEDC directors of Siu. Initially Harrelson, board member Don Stiles of Nome and Janis Ivanoff, NSEDC's acting CEO at that time, were elected to the Siu board. During an NSEDC board meeting July 28 through Aug. 1 in Nome, Ivanoff withdrew as a Siu director and NSEDC board member Harvey Sookiayak of Shaktoolik was elected to replace her. Board member Wilfred Katcheak of Stebbins asked how come Stiles holds a three-year seat on the Siu board. He received no answer.

By that time, the NSEDC board had named John Eccles and Neal Foster to the Siu board, and two other individuals from outside the company had declined invitations to join the Siu board. The NSEDC board developed a list of five candidates for the remaining two Siu seats at the July 28-Aug. 1 meeting. During the same meeting, Ivanoff gave board members a confidential written progress report on formation of Siu Alaska that included proposed bylaws for the new company. They approved Siu's bylaws as presented. The bylaws have not been made public.

The NSEDC board held a special meeting Aug. 28-29 in Anchorage to discuss plans for an educational foundation and to consider selecting directors for two open seats on the Siu board, according to Bob Walsh, NSEDC's CEO at that time. Walsh said he would inform The Nome Nugget of any actions taken at the meeting. He did not do so. Eventually the Nugget learned that John Baker of Nome and Ike Towarak of Unalakleet had been named to the Siu board.

On Nov. 6 during a meeting of NSEDC's executive committee in Nome, Harrelson said the Siu Alaska board members had elected Stiles as board chairman and president Oct. 9 during their first meeting and were advertising for a Siu Alaska CEO/assets manager within NSEDC. "No [NSEDC] assets have been transferred and won't be until a CEO is in place," Harrelson said. The company has not announced selection of a Siu CEO, but a public notice dated Jan. 6 from NSEDC's current CEO Janis Ivanoff to each municipality of the corporation's member communities and to IRAs and Native corporations states:

"NSEDC is endowing Siu with vessels and businesses that fall outside of our tax exempt ruling, including its full interests in Glacier Fish Company, the longliner F/V Glacier Bay, the crabber F/V Aleutian No. 1, and the F/V Pacific Star. It is also providing initial funding to Siu to allow it to invest in additional business ventures after due diligence." The notice adds, "Siu has been capitalized in the amount of $6 million in cash in addition to the fishery investments to provide start-up funds, operating cash, and a financing base." The notice says Siu's purpose is to earn profits and return dividends to NSEDC, Siu's sole shareholder, for its nonprofit activities.

Siu may operate in secret

There is no indication whether or how Siu Alaska Corp. intends to inform residents of NSEDC's 15 member communities of its business ventures and their successes or failures. During the NSEDC board meeting last November, Nome resident Tim Smith asked Harrelson if Siu board meetings are open to the public.

"The last one was open," Harrelson answered, but he did not say where the meeting had been held. "That would be the call of the chair. I don't know."

Smith asked whether Siu meetings will be advertised. "I'm sure we'll go through a process," Harrelson replied.

When Smith asked whether the public can see Siu's documents, Harrelson referred the question to NSEDC's attorney Margaret Russell, who told Smith the board will make public only the documents it wants to make public. "It's a private for-profit corporation," she added.

It's not known whether Siu will be required to prepare annual financial reports or make them public. NSEDC is required by federal law to prepare and disseminate annual financial reports to its member villages, but the corporation has yet not issued one for 2007. (See related story above.)

NSEDC perused UBIT question

NSEDC's first recorded public discussion of a potential tax liability for unrelated business income took place Feb. 26, 2007 at a meeting of the board's finance committee. A representative of KPMG, which provided auditing services to NSEDC and to several other CDQ groups, presented an overview of the UBIT issue and said NSEDC's tax-exempt status is not at risk because its potentially taxable activities are minor. (The KPMG representative is identified only as Dion in minutes of the meeting.)

"KPMG's view has not changed in that CDQ organizations are different, that CDQ groups are basically doing what they were set up to do, and their current activity is related to their exempt purpose and non taxable," Dion said, according to minutes of the meeting. "NSEDC has been providing their earnings activity to the IRS each year on their 990 tax return, and the IRS has not come back and said that NSEDC is doing something outside of its exempt purpose. The issue is just clarification that Bering Sea fishing activities are part of the exempt purpose."

However, Don Mitchell, who at that time was NSEDC's legislative attorney, argued that some CDQ groups and KPMG staff in Washington, D.C., think there may be an issue. Attending the meeting via teleconference, Mitchell pointed out that CDQ groups have changed their income-producing activities since the inception of the program in 1992. He noted that, early in its history, NSEDC had obtained a private letter ruling from the IRS exempting CDQ pollock harvest royalties from taxation, and he said NSEDC should let the IRS know about changes in its activities. He also suggested that NSEDC seek advice from an attorney, separate from KPMG, who is an expert on exempt tax law.

NSEDC followed Mitchell's suggestion and selected an international law firm, Latham & Watkins, as tax consultants for UBIT issues. On Nov. 12, 2007, NSEDC filed Form 990 for 2006 with the IRS, listing as unrelated business income $5.7 million from investments other than dividends and interest from securities (income derived from its ownership interest in Glacier Fish Co.), and $700,162 in harvesting revenues transferred to the corporation from its crab harvesting partner, Norton Sound Ventures LLC.

Sex abuse claims by Catholic clergy reach 294

By Diana Haecker

The total number of claimants alleging sexual abuse at the hands of Catholic priests and lay workers working for the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska between the 1950s and 1980s more than doubled to 294 claimants after a Dec. 2 bankruptcy court deadline passed.

As part of the bankruptcy proceedings a deadline was imposed to figure out once and for all how many sexual abuse claims are out there against Catholic clergy and laypersons. Bishop Donald Kettler announced in February 2008 the diocese's plan to seek bankruptcy protection, as they couldn't reach settlement agreements with 140 claimants who had filed 150 claims.

Ronnie Rosenberg, human resources director for CBNA, said that six claims were filed a day after the deadline and that she wasn't sure how those claims will be dealt with.

The 288 claimants that filed before the deadline included more claims against former Nome priest Jim Poole. Rosenberg said she could not divulge exact numbers of allegations against Poole as the claims are filed under seal with the bankruptcy court.

Altogether, 40 priests and layworkers are accused of sexual abuse.

A significant number of those claims were filed against a single lay worker, Joseph Lundowski, who worked for the Fairbanks Diocese between 1959 and 1975. "We were aware of many allegations against Lundowski," said Rosenberg. According to a story on Lundowski by Anchorage television station KTUU, he was last found in a homeless shelter in Chicago, where he presumably died in 1991.

Rosenberg added that the church lost track of Lundowski after he left Alaska in 1975, and that most priests or church employees who knew him are also deceased. Claimants against Lundowski are all males who were children at the time of their sexual abuse. He worked in Nulato, Stebbins and St. Michael, Rosenberg said.

The wave of new claimants also brought forth new names of formerly unknown alleged abusers.

As part of the bankruptcy proceeding, the court ordered a deadline to come up with a final number of claims against the diocese.

What happens next depends on whether or not the diocese and the committee of claimants can come up with an agreement. Negotiations take place between the diocese and the unsecured creditors committee, a term describing the claimants. The committee is comprised of bankruptcy attorneys and lawyers representing the claimants. "We advocate positions on behalf of the entire group of claimants with the goal to make the recovery as big as possible," said committee member David Bundy in Anchorage. He explained that the process of coming up with a final sum to be paid out to the victims is not a speedy process and that many issues need to be resolved, including how much the diocese can pay and how much the diocese's insurance is willing to pay. CBNA's insurance carrier disputed its obligation to cover sex abuse claims. "This is not a speedy process, and it always takes some time, but eventually all these issues will be resolved," Bundy said.

"Now we are garnering our assets and figuring out what we can contribute to the plan," Rosenberg said. "We are hopeful that we can work out an agreement in the next couple of months."

The diocese's Pilgrim Hot Springs property 60 miles north of Nome is one of the significant assets. "We are hoping that Pilgrim either gets sold or leased," Rosenberg said.

The Society of Jesus paid $50 million in 2007 to settle lawsuits filed by 110 Alaskans against 12 Jesuit priests and three other church workers, including Lundowski.

The Catholic News Service reports that dioceses in San Diego, Spokane/Washington, Denver/Iowa and the Archdiocese of Portland/Oregon have filed for bankruptcy to resolve clergy sex abuse claims.

persons and refer only those with medical problems the staff cannot handle to the hospital's emergency room. Some persons with experience in programs for alcoholics told The Nome Nugget that a detoxification facility is a safer, more appropriate and more effective alternative.

In an interview with the Nugget Jan. 5, Lake said he agrees with those who believe Nome needs a detoxification center with extended care such as the newly constructed, 16-bed Gateway to Recovery Center opening this month in Fairbanks. After a new hospital is built in Nome, Lake wants to use the existing hospital for alcohol and substance abuse treatment. "It would financially sustain itself," he said. "We could get funds from Medicaid, Medicare and the Alaska Mental Health Trust." He pointed out that the current hospital has no space for such a facility.

Nome's former detox facility

Ike Ozenna helped establish Turning Point Detox, a well-regarded Nome program that operated for about eight years in the 1990s. "Turning Point was a non-medical detox social program with very caring people from top to bottom," he said. "I can't say enough good about it; it was a great program. It is needed. It will take a grassroots community effort with all entities involved to get it going again."

The facility was listed as a reception center in the State of Alaska Alcoholism and Drug Abuse Plan for 1990-1992, according to Marilee Fletcher of the Department of Health and Social Services. Ozenna, a former Alaska Mental Health Trust board member, said the reason he worked to establish Turning Point is that people shouldn't have to go to jail just because they are drinking. His view is reflected in The Uniform Alcoholism and Intoxication Treatment Act, which Fletcher said was passed in the 1970s in recognition that alcoholism is a disease and is not a crime.

Ozenna obtained resolutions in support of Turning Point from tribal governments in Nome and Bering Strait villages. "I said to IRA presidents in villages, 'This is your problem as much as ours; when your people come to Nome at PFD time, we take care of them.'" The City of Nome does not deal with social problems, but can help by providing a resolution supporting a program to address them, he added.

He said a number of volunteers worked in groups with assigned tasks for about a year to establish Turning Point, which opened late in 1989 with $87,000 in state funds in a building owned by the Bureau of Indian Affairs at 105 E. First Ave. Berry Gold was the program's first director, and Ozenna served as first president of the Turning Point board.

How Turning Point operated

Sue Buchanan is the only Turning Point staff member who still resides in Nome. She retired from NSHC in 2001 after a lengthy career as a registered nurse in the emergency room, inpatient services and the outpatient clinic, and as director of Quyanna Care. She also provided health care in villages served by NSHC.

Paul King, the second director of Turning Point, hired Buchanan in 1996 to work with the program's clients. Several months later King died and Buchanan succeeded him as director until 1998, when the facility closed because the state said it did not serve enough clients to merit continued funding. "I had just received a grant for $100,000 to remodel the building," Buchanan recalled. "I had to cancel it."

Turning Point provided treatment to eight to 10 clients a night and more during cold weather in her term as director, Buchanan reports. She said the facility operated 24/7 with three 8-hour shifts, each staffed by a man and a woman with level-one training in Emergency Medical Services. They attended state-funded training programs at the UAF Northwest Campus or in Anchorage to learn how to deal with addicts. After completing their training, they were called withdrawal management supervisors and wrote WMS behind their names on patients' charts, she added.

"We ran Turning Point with a chart for each client with their name, address, phone number, next of kin, and age and kept a daily record of progress," she said. "I had to burn all the records and charts when Turning Point closed." She reported the client count to the state, but not the numbers of others who came to the facility for a free lunch or to sit on a couch on a cold day. She wishes she had counted and reported all of those who received food and shelter at Turning Point. The Nome Nugget has not yet been able to obtain from state records data about the program such as numbers of clients served.

"Our budget was $525,000 a year, and we needed in-kind services," Buchanan continued. "Restaurants in town gave us leftover baked goods, the grocery stores donated food, and the hospital did not charge us for treating our clients." She said the ratio of men to women among clients was about two to one. Most Turning Point clients were alcoholics, some were addicted to drugs, and some used both drugs and alcohol, she added.

Dedicated staff needed

Buchanan said she interrupted her career at NSHC to work at Turning Point because she wanted to do something about the inebriated population she was seeing in the hospital's emergency room. "The police and hospital staff can get callous after dealing with them 20 times a day," she explained. "It takes a special person to deal with intoxicated people. They are not pleasant. You have to be able to see beyond that and then start seeing what they need.

"The staff was very dedicated to Turning Point," she continued. "All of the staff—except myself, one WMS and the secretary—were recovering alcoholics. They worked well with our clients. You can't fool somebody who's been there."

"It was our rule that anyone who came to the door got in," she continued. "Clients were referred to us mostly by the hospital after they were seen in ER. They were intoxicated, wet and cold, and the hospital had no place to send them. Everyone got a bath and was tucked into bed."

"The jail did not want them; it's not set up to do detox," she noted. "You have to be able to monitor vital signs during detoxification. We gave clients meds prescribed by a doctor for detox, and if something came up that needed a doctor's attention, which it often did, we returned them to the hospital."

Buchanan described a woman who came to Turning Point intoxicated and was put in bed but sat up. "Her blood pressure kept going down, which is the opposite of what happens in the detox process, so I sent her to the hospital in an ambulance. She died. We learned she had been beaten a couple of days earlier and her bladder had ruptured, but she did not know that. She was in pain, so she drank and then she became septic."

"Intoxicated people often have other medical problems," she said. "They become sick with pneumonia, and too often they don't see beyond alcohol, and too often the hospital is focused on their alcoholism."

Marvin Poyourow, NSHC's clinical director of Behavioral Health Services with 25 years of experience at the corporation, describes Turning Point as a wonderful program that fortunately was run by a registered nurse. "There is always a danger for alcoholics of physiological reactions with abstinence," he noted. "Sue covered that end, made sure people were safe and sent them to the hospital if necessary. Turning Point was very sensitive to the psychological, social and economic needs of the client and tried to understand what support could be built in for sobriety. I found that every person who went through detox at Turning Point had a plan or goal. I often referred people there or received clients from Turning Point. I was very unhappy to see it close."

Poyourow believes that Nome needs a facility that can provide residential treatment with a detoxification component. "We need it desperately," he said. "There is room to discuss what the [program] would look like. We lose so much: People get hurt, people get sick, people die, and it's related to addiction."

He agrees with the Norton Sound's CEO Lake that the hospital's growing number of alcohol-related visits strains its resources. "To his credit, he got concerned enough to throw the problem on the table," Poyourow said. In addition to picking up the slack for the Nome community, the hospital provides care for villagers who become inebriated in Nome, he noted.

Detoxification takes time

"Detoxification takes three to five days," Buchanan said. "Alcoholics build up a resistance to the drug and can be legally drunk and appear and function normally, so you have to get them below their maintenance level for complete withdrawal. Then you will see detox symptoms. The blood pressure goes up; the pulse can, too. There may be tremors, nervous agitation, pacing and in some cases hallucination. That needs monitoring. There is a chance that their blood pressure will get too high and they will have a heart attack. Or they may hurt themselves when they hallucinate. Withdrawal is traumatic. This is when they need help."

"A key point is that no treatment facility will take you unless you are stone-cold sober, and you've got a mile and a half to walk first," she noted. "Getting them to treatment is difficult. Alcoholism is a very different disease. A psychiatrist told me alcoholism, like many diseases, sometimes is terminal. A terminal alcoholic needs treatment the same as a terminal cancer patient. We can't just blow them off."

Buchanan described rules followed by Turning Point clients in a stepping stone process toward recovery. "At intake we said, 'We're glad you're here.' One detox visit planted a tiny little seed in the bottom of the bottle. Whether or not it grew, they remembered. We planted the seed and had to step back and let it grow.

"During a second visit, clients watched one Alcoholics Anonymous video, and the third time they came they watched two AA videos," she said. "On their fourth visit, we sent them to an AA meeting. If they returned again we tried to get them into treatment. I sent clients all over the state to treatment centers."

Benefits of Turning Point

Buchanan listed some benefits of the Turning Point program for clients and the community. "It was a medically safe place to stay. There was never any violence. No one froze to death on the street while we were open. We cut down the number of intoxicated persons the police had to deal with. We obtained funding to open a place next to Builders Supply for recovering alcoholics to hang out and play games. We started six or seven Alcoholics Anonymous groups. To this day I see sober persons in Nome who were Turning Point clients."

She said a number of Turning Point clients who recovered left Nome and found a new environment helpful in staying sober. "Never once did any of our clients call me at home or come to my house," she added. "They had that much respect. They called me 'Mom.'"

In regard to the needs of Nome's current population of chronic inebriates, Buchanan says, "It's a problem that everybody would like to fix. It's basically finding someone who will actually step up and do it. It's not easy to love them, but if you tell them what you expect, they will do it."

Childhood dream fulfilled

"I passed a dog kennel as a little girl and thought I would like to run one," recalled Buchanan, who currently operates Raven Nest Boarding Kennel at her home in Banner Creek. "I decided I wanted to be a nurse when I was a teenager." Born and raised in Pueblo, Colo., she worked as an intensive care nurse at Denver General Hospital before moving to Nome in 1989. In the year before she retired from NSHC, she completed a veterinary technician training course by correspondence.

Buchanan's kennel was full during the holidays, with 20 dogs outside and five little ones (poodles, for instance) inside the house. She walks the small dogs four times a day and the large ones twice a day.

"We had a musk ox come into the dog lot last fall," she said. "My husband, Bill, shot a rifle in the air and the dumb thing just looked at us. Bells and whistles did not help. Our son, Doug, took a canoe and banged it till it went away. The dogs thought the musk ox was a big puppy."

Buchanan provides medical care to her borders if necessary. "A 14-year-old sled dog tried to die, but I would not let him" she said. "Dr. [Derrick] Leedy treated the dog and gave me medication for him. I gave the dog shots at home. I also mixed water with raw eggs and poured them into him. Now he's back pulling his owner on skis. He was just plain sick, not elderly and dying."

Buchanan clearly finds fulfillment in her whole-hearted commitment to the health and well-being of humans and critters alike. "Not many people can say they did the things they wanted to do most with their lives," she said.

Read a good book lately?

By Meghan Ten Eyck

When was the last time you visited Nome's Kegoayah Kozga library?

Maybe it was yesterday, last week, possibly even longer. I will admit that I have not made the time to read for enjoyment as much as I would have liked this past year. However, this Christmas break I took some time to relax and actually read for pleasure. I forgot how wonderful it was to get lost in a book!

My New Year's resolution is to read more literature. I would like to propose a similar resolution to everyone in Nome. I encourage and invite everyone to visit the local library at least once a month with their family. It's free, and the time spent there is 100 percent worth it.

Incorporating reading into your child's daily life is the first step on the road to success. One of the best ways to accomplish this is a trip to the library. To get the most out of the library, treat it like an adventure. Set up a time with the library staff to get a personal tour. Ask about any special programs, such as a preschool story hour.

Using a child's interests is another wonderful way to encourage reading. Before heading to the library, have you and your child pick a topic—such as dinosaurs, for example—you want to learn and read about. While you are there, go on a "book hunt" and find all the books on that topic.

All that is left to do is to choose a time during the day that can be dedicated to quality uninterrupted reading time with your child. To help engage them, ask questions before, during and after reading. This helps with comprehension, sequencing and predicting skills. Remember, that even just 10 minutes of reading is better than an hour of TV.

There are so many benefits to reading together that it could fill a whole book.

Reading together can lead to further discussion, exploration and interest in learning. It also expands children's horizons and their imaginations by exposing them to new and different worlds. This also can lead to finding activities based on the book or topic. Check the back of books because sometimes there are suggested activities listed that you can do with your child.

Not only does reading together help strengthen the bond between you and your child; it helps create successful readers. Listening to stories helps young children develop rich language and vocabulary skills, which are particularly important when they begin to learn how to read.

I hope that everyone will join me in finding more time to incorporate reading into their family's lives. The library staff and/or your child's teacher would love to help you pick books that your child would enjoy.

The joy of reading is one of the best gifts you can ever give a child.

Nome's boy and girl ballers both post back-to-back wins over Unalakleet last weekend

The Lady Nanook basketball team kept its record spotless with a pair of wins at home against Unalakleet last weekend. Their male counterparts also continued their dominance on the court, putting the Wolfpack on the ropes on their home court with two decisive wins.

In their 2009 home opener Jan. 9 the Nome-Beltz Lady Nanooks combined strong defense and solid rebounding to defeat the visiting Unalakleet Lady Wolfpack 54-26. Rachael Bauman and Richelle Horner led a balanced Nanook offensive attack with 14 points each. Vanessa Tahbone chipped in with 12 points, and Hilary Stiles added seven.

Unalakleet made the Lady Nanooks earn it Saturday night, with Nome pulling out a 42-40 win to keep their record untarnished at 5-0.

When the Nanook boys hit the court, the scorekeeper is bound to get a workout keeping pace with the action on the court. In Friday night's game in Unalakleet, Nome put up 40 points to the Wolfpack's six in the first quarter alone. Jesse Blandford scored 15 points in the first quarter, while Jeremy Head notched the same tally in just nine minutes of play. Nome won the game 79-32.

The Nanooks followed up on Saturday night by delivering another bruising with a final tally of 89-45. Blandford again wielded a hot hand, scoring 23 of his game-high 32 points in the first quarter. Head added 20 and Tim Sullivan put up 10 points. The win put Nome at 8-1 for the season.

Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium elects new chairman and president

The Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium (ANTHC) board of directors has selected Andy Teuber of Kodiak as its chairman and president. Teuber is president and chief executive officer (CEO) of the Kodiak Area Native Association (KANA), a post he has held since May 2006.

ANTHC and board member Ray

Alstrom welcomed Teuber as Consortium chairman and president. "With his leadership, and the leadership of all the board members, we will continue to improve patient care services for all our Native people," said Alstrom. "Andy has a difficult task ahead of him during these hard times, but with his strong leadership and fortitude, we shall prevail."

Noting that Teuber has served at the local, regional, and statewide level in tribal, non-profit, and for-profit organizations, board member Bernice Kaigelak said, ".....Andy brings a wealth of knowledge in finance and a fresh look in leadership."

Board member Charles Clement said, "Mr. Teuber's new perspective, energy, and leadership are a welcome addition in addressing the challenges and opportunities facing the Consortium."

Among his priorities, Teuber considers the support he can offer to eradicate child sexual abuse in Alaska to be his most important contribution.

Merger

NWC (U.S.) Holdings Inc., its wholly owned subsidiaries of Alaska Commercial Company, Cost-U-Less, Inc. and Span Alaska Enterprises,

Inc. merged effective December 31, 2008. The merged companies are to operate under the name The North West Company (International) Inc.

NWC (U.S.) Holding Inc. is a subsidiary of the North West Company Fund, which is a leading retailer of food and everyday products and services to rural communities and urban neighbourhoods in Canada, Alaska, the South Pacific and the Caribbean. It's expansion with the December 2007 purchase of Cost-U-Less, Inc. and March 2008 purchase of Span Alaska Enterprises, Inc. results in 222 stores operating under the trading names of Northern, NorthMart, Giant Tiger, AC Value Center and Cost-U-Less and has annualized sales of approximately CDN $1.3 billion. Further information on the North West Company including audit consolidated financial statements are available on the Company's website at www.northwest.ca or www.sedar.com a site that Canadian securities regulatory authorities require for mandatory filings for publicly traded companies.

HOROSCOPES

January 15 - 21, 2009

CAPRICORN
Drama, drama, drama. You cannot escape it this week, Capricorn. Cope the best you can and take comfort in an unusual source. Your financial picture begins to shape up.

AQUARIUS
Move over, Aquarius, and let someone else take center stage at a family event. It's their turn to shine. A frank discussion with a friend ends well.

PISCES
Testing, Pisces, testing. A youngster tries your patience repeatedly. Be polite but firm with them. They may be just vying for some attention. The path to a solution at work takes shape.

ARIES
Don't make mountains out of molehills, Aries. Accept a situation for what it is and move on. You've got bigger fish to fry. A neighbor makes a deal with you.

TAURUS
This is not the time for wishful thinking, Taurus. Action is required. If you don't step up to the plate, no one else will. A financial endeavor pans out.

GEMINI
Surely, Gemini, you have more to say than you are letting on. Say your peace and let the healing begin. A romantic gesture ends the week on a high note.

CANCER
Golly, Cancer, you go all out for a family event, and lo and behold, people take notice. The accolades are all yours. A friend is in low spirits and could use a boost.

LEO
This is your lucky week, Leo. You are consistently in the right place at the right time. A real estate venture goes well for an acquaintance. Invite them over for a little celebration.

VIRGO
Don't put off tomorrow what you can do today, Virgo. The resources are at hand. A mystery at work compounds. Be patient. All will be revealed in good time.

LIBRA
Livid, Libra. That's what a young friend is feeling, and it's up to you to find out why and set them straight. Excitement at home hits a fever pitch.

SCORPIO
Come on, Scorpio. You've got what it takes, so go for it. Pursue that project with all of your might and let your talents shine. It could just be the start of a new you.

SAGITTARIUS
Sleep, sleep, sleep. You are sorely lacking in that department, Sagittarius. Stop avoiding the source of the problem. Face it, fix it and sweet dreams will come.

Obituaries

Lyle Okinello

In Loving Memory ~Lyle Edwin Okinello~

Lyle Edwin Okinello was born on November 13, 1968 to Martha Okinello in Nome. Lyle died and went to be with the Lord on January 4, 2009 in Nome.

Lyle attended school in Nome graduating from Nome-Beltz High School with the class of 1987. He was on the junior high basketball team. In his youth, he loved playing softball, Eskimo baseball, dice, and riding snowmachines and motorcycles. He also enjoyed carving ivory.

Lyle worked as a day laborer throughout his life. He worked for Wiley Scott, Reindeer Plant, Glue Pot, Stop Shop & Save, Hanson's Trading Company, and for the Unalakleet Covenant Bible Camp.

In recent years, Lyle often dropped by the Covenant Church Soup Kitchen for a bowl of hot soup, to sing, and to reminisce about the past. The last song he requested was "Amazing Grace."

Lyle was closest with his older brother Kevin. He treasured spending time with his nieces, nephews, and family. His family said: "Lyle was a kind, loving, gentle man. Despite his struggles with health issues and his long struggle with alcohol, he always had an upbeat attitude. Lyle had a wonderful sense of humor. He didn't have a mean bone in his body. We all will miss him."

Lyle is survived by his mother, Martha Richards of Anchorage; brother, Richard Okinello and wife Laura of Nome; brother, Kevin Okinello and wife Leiani of Anchorage; nieces, Dena and Rachel; and nephew, Christopher. He considered niece and nephews, Ida Brown, Tim Brown, and Kenneth Smith. He was preceded in death by his grandparents, Peter and Daisy Okinello; and aunt, Jeannie Hong.

Lyle will be remembered as a kind, heartfelt, gentle and a giving soul. He was quick to lend a helping hand, laugh and always found humor in everything. His constant smile will never be forgotten.

Caroline Saak Tocktoo September 18, 2008 – January 3, 2009

Caroline Saak Tocktoo is survived by her father and mother Edward and Darla, and brothers Arnold, Phillip, and Lance, her grandmother Lenora; grandfather Elmer Jr. and Nana Candy; uncle Elmer III and cousin Jayden; uncle Jeremy; auntie Shauna (Reuben) and cousins Ida and Destiny; and auntie Sara and cousins Scott and Brady; and many great aunts and uncles; grandfather Clarence Tocktoo; uncle Stan (Kara) and cousins Harvey and Grace; auntie Karen (David) and cousins Mickey, Kris, and Sam; uncle Archie (Kathy) and cousins Pamela, Tamara, Nicholas, and Katelynn; uncle Ernie and cousins Mamie, Esau, and Kennedrick; auntie Lisa (Ken) and cousins Gabriel, Sarah, Timary, and Timothy; and "auntie" Teresa Stenek.

She is preceded in death by great grandma Caroline, grandfather Ward, great grandma Molly and great grandpa Elmer Seetot Sr., great grandmother Signa Kokeok, grandma Sarah Tocktoo, and first Karen Kokeok.

Lola NiyiaqsaanNniq Avessuk

Lola NiyiaqsaanNniq Avessuk, 87, went to be with her Lord Jesus on December 10, 2008 at Providence Hospital after a stroke. Gram was born July 5, 1921 to Thomas and Mattie Okpowruk and spent all her life in Shishmaref. Gram had a strong spiritual faith and often recited her favorite Bible verse John 14:6; "I am the way, the truth and the life, he who abides in me shall never abide in darkness." She was a loving and giving person, providing spiritual help in prayer to whomever in need. She grew up in the true subsistence way of life. She picked whatever grows in season, spending the summer working on ugruk to store away for winter use. She was gifted in skin sewing, especially making parkies, slippers, and mukluks.

She walked long distances with her brother Charley and sister Edith while picking berries and moose hunting. She is on her final journey, the very best walking journey of her entire life to her new home. She said she would someday go to her new housing. We praise and thank the Lord for having her for a long time, which in essence seems to be so short.

She was preceded in death by her parents Thomas and Mattie Okpowruk, her beloved husband Fred Avessuk, brothers Wilson and his wife Reila and Charley, her daughter Nellie Eningowuk, granddaughter Catherine Eningowuk, first grandson Thomas Ahgupuk, great-granddaughter Mercedes Shyanne Elsie Nugalaq Olanna, son-in-laws Henry Ahgupuk and Richard Merrill, niece Faye Lucio.

She is survived by her daughter Georgianna Merrill (companion Fred Goodhope, Jr.) and grandchildren Alfred Charlie, Wilsa, Mattie, Irene, Thomas Ahgupuk, Debra Murphy and son Authur, and David Murphy, great-grandsons Henry, Ned and Alex, great-granddaughter Jezebel "Bella" Olanna, sister Edith Okpowruk, niece Mina (Reuben) Weyiouanna, great nieces and nephews Jason (Annie) and their son Luke; Nathan, Mattie (Norman) and their children Charley Richard, Madison and Roxanne; Ruth Bessie (Jared) and their children Katie and Gavin Jack; nephews and nieces Joshua Okpowruk (Marlene) of Wainwright, Frances (Willie), Wilson Okpowruk Jr., Gideon Okpowruk, Sally Mattie, Eva Hannah, all of Shishmaref; Melissa Lucio, her daughter Deandra and Poncho Lucio of Anchorage, son-in-law Delbert Eningowuk, grandchildren Wayne (Sylvia) Eningowuk of Nome, great-grandson, Dennis; Betty Bullard of Anchorage and her daughters Xyanna and Oberon, great-grandchildren Damien and Aayzah; Fred (Frieda) Eningowuk and great-grandchildren Andrew Jack, Dolly, Jackie Marie, Darryl, Nellie, Hattie; Katherine Eningowuk (Dan Sanchez) of Soldotna, great-grandchildren Alexandra Taylor of Anchorage, Antonio Sanchez of Soldotna; Joseph (Rita) Eningowuk of Shishmaref and great-grandchildren Thomas, Vanessa, Herbert Barr, Christine Attatatak, and great-granddaughters Alice and Larissa; Ruby (Bill) Jones of Shishmaref and great-grandchildren Mina Eningowuk, Bill Jones Jr., Henry Jones and great-granddaughter Amy Sherice Eningowuk, and great-granddaughter Kelly Eningowuk (Mike Kompkoff) of Anchorage. She had numerous relatives on Fred Avessuk's side and regarded them as her own immediate family.

Statewide premiere of KUAC documentary:

Mr. Alaska: Bob Bartlett goes to Washington debut coincides with celebration of 50 years as a state

Fairbanks, AK – With his horn-rimmed spectacles and plain speech, Edward Lewis "Bob" Bartlett was Alaska's face in Washington for two decades. His story has largely been forgotten, until now.

A new documentary from KUAC public television in Fairbanks explores the life and times of Bob Bartlett and celebrates his role in the creation of the 49th state. Mr. Alaska: Bob Bartlett Goes to Washington premieres on public television stations statewide January 29th.

The documentary continues the narrative begun with KUAC's Emmy-winning production of The 49th Star, which chronicles Alaska's groundbreaking constitution and the grassroots efforts that led to Alaska becoming one of the United States of America. The program is funded by a wide range of sponsors, including New York Life, the Fairbanks Memorial Hospital and UA Eight Stars of Gold.

"KUAC is proud to produce this next chapter in the story of statehood and to once again be a part of Alaska history curricula throughout the state," said Claudia Clark, Executive Producer and KUAC Director of Programming and Production.

From his roots as a small-town reporter and gold miner to his position as Alaska's Territorial Delegate, Bob Bartlett left a legacy matched by few; he helped create the very state he served, changing the features of both the American flag and the country. Clark said it's an honor to be trusted with telling Bob Bartlett's story. "We're privileged to offer a chance for viewers to hear directly from many of the people who played key roles in Alaska's successful bid for statehood."

Spanning gold stampedes, the state's territorial days and even two World Wars, Bob Bartlett's story reflects the rapid changes that shaped the 49th state during the previous century. KUAC's documentary Mr. Alaska: Bob Bartlett Goes to Washington will air on the state's public television stations on Thursday, January 29, 2009 at 9 p.m. as Alaskans begin the yearlong celebration of the 50th anniversary of

On December 23, 2008 at approximately 9:45 p.m., AST received a report of a 17-year old overdue motorist with three minor passengers that left Nome at 3:00 p.m., and had not returned. A hasty team was sent out and located the truck and its four occupants at approximately 11:30 p.m., at 15 mile Kougarok Road. The truck had been stuck in a snowdrift for approximately six hours and the occupants did not have any winter gear. No injuries were reported. Nome AST would like to thank the Nome Volunteer Fire Department for their quick response that resulted in locating the juvenile driver and his youth passengers. AST would remind drivers to be prepared for emergencies during the winter months and have winter gear available in the case of a break down or other emergency.

On January 3, 2009, at about 3:00 p.m., White Mountain VPSO Dan Harrelson arrested a 16-year-old male juvenile on a Nome Court arrest warrant requested by the Nome Youth Facility.
The juvenile was transported without incident to Nome where he was detained at the Nome Youth Facility.

On January 3, Alaska Wildlife Troopers issued a citation to Matthew Slingsby, of Nome, for taking a cow musk ox with a RX099 Permit, which allowed for the taking of a bull only.

try to tease them lovingly, that they fight you the way they know how, like saying no. The reason for that is they can see, through their mind's eye, that there is no honest love when you try to tease them lovingly.

All children are innocent. It is us adults who instill this badness in them. So saying this or that child is bad, in essence, is a lie in itself. It is us adults who must put a stop to this badness. It starts within yourself. It is then and only then that you will be able to show this honest love to the toddlers that are not your own. That is why Jesus said, "The children are suffering. Let them come to me so that I may teach them." He was always teaching about love before the elite, the ones in power, murdered him.

We all, each one of you, have a purpose in life. That purpose is to value creation. There are two pillars or two guiders of life, that stop our minds from becoming this value creator. Those two guiders are religion and big government. For three thousand plus years they have ruled over the people. Religion uses fear to control your mind. Believe in my god or burn in firey hell for all eternity. Big government uses force to control you. Pay your taxes or go to jail. They do not want you to honestly and purely love yourselves as the toddlers do, because if you did, you would not need a leader. You would be a self leader and they would be out of jobs. The forces of nature are very powerful. They use those forces to control you. Like the pack of wolves that go after the old and sick, because they are the easiest to catch. We tend to do things that are easiest. We have to learn to get out of our comfort zone in order to break out of their control.

The first step is to relearn to love (y)ourselves. Because honesty requires love, start from there. Stop yourself when you catch yourself starting to lie. The universe is endless, it goes on forever and ever, so there are endless things to invent, to create. Human beings are happiest when creating values. You can start by creating a loving home.

Jesus, Mohammad, Buddha and all the Sons of God were always teaching about love. All they were saying was, if you find this love I speak of, you will also be able to do the things you see me doing. So I'd like to suggest that we all make a New Year's resolution to seek this childlike love of self and when we find it, like them, we will be able to do great things, like create our own heaven here on earth.

With love and honesty,
Warren S. Rock

Nomeites were treated to an amazing display of skill and acrobatics Saturday evening when members of tae kwon do demonstration teams from Anchorage and South Korea paid the Gold Rush City a visit. Part of Nome tae kwon do Master Dan Scholten's Bering Strait Taekwondo Project, the teams split boards, completed soaring kicks and sparred for a jam-packed Nome Recreation Center Saturday evening. The Korean team is on its way to area villages with Scholten where they will help develop tae kwon do programs in the schools.

CELEBRATION—Reggie Bright delivers the invocation for an Inauguration Day party at Nome's Mini Convention Center last Tuesday.

Inauguration Day in Nome feted with song, food and speech

By Tyler Rhodes

This was an inauguration celebration where no gowns or tuxedos would be seen, and you certainly did not need a ticket to get in.

The catering was handled by each guest in the form of a potluck. And the orchestra sure looked and sounded like the Louie Green Band.

In short, it was an inaugural celebration perfectly in tune with Nome.

By last Tuesday evening, Nome's Mini Convention Center was dressed in red, white and blue as flags, bunting and streamers adorned the walls and stage. Several small posters of President Barack Obama were strung along one wall facing a nearly six-foot tall campaign sign

Utility's pricey fuel sits like a time bomb

Nomeites are soon likely to pay more for electricity

By Tyler Rhodes

Sitting on nearly 1.6 million gallons of what is likely the most expensive fuel it has ever purchased, the Nome Joint Utility System Board of Directors struggled in two different work sessions last week to figure out how best to use that fuel without significantly raising its rates.

That fuel, priced at just more than $4 per gallon when all the various fees are accounted for, was purchased last year at the apex of an incredible climb in oil prices.

The utility's fuel is used to power Nome's generators that supply power to the city and surrounding area.

At this point, it appears the board members will take a wait-and-see approach for a couple of months before deciding on a course of action.

This year's fuel situation is a bit unordinary for NJUS due to a couple of factors. The utility currently has a total inventory of more than 3.8 million gallons, which is unusually high for this time of year. That excess can be tracked to the suspension of activity at the Rock Creek Mine since late November. The utility purchased extra fuel last year to ensure it would be able to supply electricity to a mine hungry for power as it went into full production.

With the nearly idle mine now, drawing just a slight fraction of what was anticipated—and no expectation of it to be back online before late next summer at the earliest—NJUS currently has enough fuel that it could potentially wait to fill its tanks until the summer of 2010.

"We can pretty much make it to the 2010 shipping season," said NJUS General Manager John Handeland.

Waiting to refill, however, could result in utility customers ultimately paying more for their power.

The problem is the fuel that makes up the utility's total supply was purchased at different times at different prices. What is currently being charged right now reflects the least expensive fuel NJUS has at its disposal. Utility customers are currently paying an 18 cent surcharge per kilowatt-hour on fuel that is priced at $2.70 per gallon. NJUS has enough fuel at this price to last until October.

On the other end of the scale, if the price were based solely on the 1.6 million gallons NJUS has stored in tanks owned by fuel-supplier Crowley, the surcharge would jump to more than 25 cents. For this reporter, that 7-cent jump in the surcharge would equate to another $30 tacked on to his November bill for a small, two-person household.

If the utility board leaves the rates as is, that abrupt cost increase would come in October once the cheaper fuel was exhausted.

Handeland said the utility currently uses an inventory-averaging formula to determine its price per gallon, on which it bases its fuel surcharge. Under that system, the price is determined by considering the quantities of the fuel and their respective costs. The utility's fuel stored in Crowley's tanks is currently not factored into the average.

If the fuel in the Crowley tanks were brought into the mix right now instead of waiting for the cheaper fuel to run out, Handeland said the per gallon price would sit at $3.68 with a surcharge of 22.64 cents. Looking back at this reporter's bill, it would have cost an extra $19 in November to keep the lights on.

Bite the bullet now or later?

Handeland told the board that among its options is to raise the surcharge to 22.64 cents right now and start using the more expensive fuel so

Sale of former reindeer plant buoys city budget by $1 million

Money matters figure large in Monday's meeting as Common Council deals with budgets and bonds

By Laurie McNicholas

City Manager Josie Bahnke submitted an FY 2009 general fund budget adjustment that increased its revenues by $1.1 million to the Nome Common Council at a meeting Jan. 26.

Most of the increase comes from the sale of the City's Reindeer Plant property to Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. for $1 million.

Ordinances amending the City's FY 2009 general fund municipal budget, capital projects fund budget, special revenue fund budget, Port of Nome fund budget and construction capital projects fund budget were unanimously approved by the Council.

The Council adopted a resolution authorizing the City to issue general obligation school bonds for up to $644,195 to finance the planning, design and construction of school and related capital improvements in the city. Voters approved issuance of the bonds in a City election Oct. 7, 2008.

The Council approved changes in a nearly complete agreement between the City of Nome, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the Alaska Municipal Bond Bank for issuance and repayment of the City's port revenue refunding bond 2009A for up to $5 million to refund the City's Port Revenue Bond 1986 Series A. Under the agreement the City is required to repay the 1986 Series A bonds by making semi-annual payments every six months of principal and accrued interest over 30 years at an annual interest rate of 4.05 percent.

The Council adopted an ordinance

Letters

Dear Nancy,
Inclusive. Two million people gathered in peace, in unity, in Washington, D.C. for the peaceful transition of power to our new President, Barack Hussein Obama.
As a talented young man still looking to define himself, he chose the challenge of Harvard, not the glamour of Hollywood. As a graduate of Harvard he chose the challenge of Southside Chicago, not the money and prestige of Wall Street.
For the past two years he has cleared gracefully the seemingly insurmountable hurdles encountered along the path to the Presidency. I am confident, however, the Presidency was not his goal, but a necessary benchmark to his true objective,

Blowin' in the Wind

The answer to the rising cost of energy is all around us. Sometimes it smacks us in the face, other times it shoves us between the shoulder blades and seems to do everything but roll up a newspaper and whack us on the side of the head. The folks at Kawerak got it right. The red lights are flashing, the blades are turning and Banner Wind is kicking power back into the Nome Joint Utilities' power grid. The ancient Greek god Aeolus, who had dominion over the wind, must be huffing and puffing around the turbines that have sprouted on Banner Peak. He probably wants to give Sitnasuak and Bering Straits Native Corporations a pat on the back for taking the initiative to harness the wind.
Nome sits with its NJU fuel tanks filled to the brim with what has to be some of the world's most expensive fuel oil. We are studying the timing for purchasing fuel oil when it is least costly. Although we will always have to have some fuel oil on hand, we should be eyeing other locations to plant some more wind turbines. Wind generation is not a new technology; we have had it in our midst for many years. Some of us remember the wind generator at the Northwest Campus back in the 1980s. It was ahead of its time and NJU would not let it feed back into the grid. It was dismantled and is probably languishing in someone's storage shed. We now need to take charge of our energy problem and be innovative. We can do a lot with a bit of creativity and technology.
Let's harness the wind and pick up the pace of Nome's use of technology. We could do a lot to make life better in Nome and the villages of northwest Alaska. We could capture our waste heat. Just imagine a greenhouse that utilizes the waste heat of our power plants, or by solar tubes. Think of trucks powered by fuel cells. What if we tapped into the abundant natural gas that is underfoot close by? The answer to our energy crisis is not only blowing in the wind; it is dancing in our brains and could be enhancing our pocketbooks. —N.L.M.—

to continue his service to this country. A country that is also facing seemingly insurmountable challenges. No one man can face down these challenges, but the unity so brilliantly evident at the Presidential Inauguration and at the multitude of community gatherings across our country can.
I hope and I pray our diverse factions can keep focused on the greater good of the whole, and maintain this spirit of unity that is enriching our country in this time of economic crises.
May God bless Nome, northwest Alaska, and these United States of America, and may we continue to support and derive a new energy from our Commander-in-Chief, Barack Hussein Obama.

Dear Editor,
I would like to extend my thanks to Nancy and her staff for remembering the Nome citizens who are serving in the military. When I heard that The Nome Nugget sends their newspaper to these citizens who are serving in the military, it showed me how much support our town has for these people. They are able to stay in touch with the news of Nome and surrounding area and feel our support, even though they are miles from home.

Thank you for reaching out to our family members who serve.
Sincerely,

Nome, AK
Dear Editor,
An Alaska Native leader knows the rules and protocols of the people. An example is the whaling captain who knows how to work with his team, how to divide the whale according to what goes to whom. A leader's character is subtle and benevolent, not boastful.
A true Native leader is able to mentor and nurture the potential of each individual in the community. A good leader connects people to each other and the environment, providing hope for things bigger than themselves. We need Native leadership because we can no longer allow others to speak and do for us.

Various agencies have created and perpetuated a cycle of dependence. For decades agencies have tried and failed to address problems such as suicide, alcohol and drug abuse and domestic violence in Native communities.
President Obama said programs that fail will be identified and monies will be put toward those that are effective and meaningful.
Others, because of having lived in rural communities or holding masters' or doctorate degrees, pretend to know what's best for Alaska Native people. Western style programs and qualifications are inadequate for identifying problems and finding solutions for Alaska Natives. It is time for true Alaska Native leaders to emerge! Let's do our own work using our elders' wisdom, traditional knowledge, Native sciences, and Native principles and values.

Emergency housing team begins to form in Nome

By Laurie McNicholas
A group of Nome residents who are concerned about the needs of others in the community for emergency shelter has met once a month since October at the Nome Community Center. The meetings are open to the public, and the next one is scheduled Feb. 13 at 10 a.m. at NCC.
Isaac Grody-Patinkin, NCC's family services coordinator, is facilitating an effort to form an emergency housing team—a network of individuals and organizations that can provide housing on a short-term basis for persons who need it.
The meetings began after Grody-Patinkin and Glen Parly, housing director of Nome Eskimo Community compared notes about receiving calls requesting emergency housing and tried to identify resources, for example, to meet the needs of a mother and three children whose house has lost its electricity or a family that is being evicted from housing.
Grody-Patinkin said he expects to coordinate emergency housing requests with available housing sources when an emergency housing network is in place.
He said the group also is looking for long-term solutions to the housing needs of chronically homeless persons in Nome, but he emphasized that the team is not trying to establish a detoxification center for alcoholics. He hopes the team can arrange with a local organization that owns apartments to reserve one or more apartments for the use of chronically homeless persons.

In addition to individuals and churches, attendance at the emergency housing team meetings has included representatives of Kawerak, NEC and Norton Sound Health Corp., Grody-Patinkin reports.

on the other.

As Nomeites enjoyed the salads, soups and other goodies brought by community members, they were treated to a set of songs by Sarah Hanson and Karen McLane before several speakers took the stage to commemorate the day.

Nome Common Council member Neal Foster served as the master of ceremonies armed with several presidential factoids to relay to the audience. Nome resident Reggie Bright delivered a short speech and an invocation. Mayor Denise Michels also took the stage to mark the day.

Last Tuesday also marked a new start in the state capitol as the Alaska Legislature got underway. Speaking by phone from Juneau, Sen. Donny Olson noted the importance of the occasion. "This truly is an historic day," Olson said.

Olson also spoke to the start of the new Legislature, voicing hope that the rural legislators serving in majority coalitions in both the House and Senate would see that Bush Alaska's concerns be heard in Juneau.

Olson's call had come just as Nome's Richard Beneville was taking the stage to deliver a few words of his own. Always gracious, Beneville ceded the spotlight for the senator's telephonic appearance. Delayed but not sidelined, Beneville returned and started by playing Ray Charles' version of "America the Beautiful."

Beneville spoke of hope and the belief that America's view of race can, and has, changed with the inauguration of its first African-American president. "What we have seen, perhaps we will not see so much again because of what happened several weeks ago," Beneville said. "America and its youth, they don't see color any more."

Taking a cue from the new president's speech earlier in the day which reverberated with a call for civic responsibility, Beneville asked the audience to keep pushing forward to better ourselves. "America has come a long, long way," Beneville said. "I'm asking you as Democrats—forget the Democrats—as Americans, to continue

The audience was also asked to enjoy themselves and Green and his band members provided the soundtrack.

In addition to the music, door prizes from Nome Trading Post, Bonanza Express, Kawerak and others were handed out to lucky ticket holders.

ratepayers won't be broadsided with an even bigger jump just at the start of next winter. Board members said that plan may have merit while the majority of residential power customers are still benefitting from a $500 energy subsidy provided by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

At the same time, board members were reluctant to raise the charge at all. "I don't really like the idea of raising the current price now," said board member Fred Moody. "People can't afford it. That's a lot of money."

Another option would be to hold off on incorporating the expensive fuel into the price structure until NJUS could possibly purchase more, less expensive fuel to help offset the cost of the supplies in the Crowley tanks. Handeland said the utility would likely have the capacity to take another 900,000 gallons of fuel at the beginning of October.

Handeland said the cost of fuel at that time would need to be around $2 to offset the more expensive fuel on stock and be able to keep the surcharge where it is currently. Handeland said fuel at the time of last week's meeting was in the range of $1.60 a gallon. There is no way to predict just where fuel prices will be in October.

Board member Jim West, Jr. put yet another option on the table, questioning what effect it would have on the utility if the price were left where it is and NJUS were to eat the cost of using up the more expensive fuel. Handeland replied that such a move would leave the utility on the hook for $1 million.

"If we take a million-dollar hit, where do we shave?" West asked.

Handeland said there are some positions within the utility that could be left unfilled, though he did not recommend that option. "That's not a safe way to go, in my opinion," he said. "I don't think we could shave the million, but we can look at what options we may have."

Board member Carl Emmons suggested a possible scenario. "If the city so chose, and they had some money lying around, they could buy down the price of fuel," Emmons said.

"We can always ask them, but I think I know the answer," Handeland said.

"If you don't ask, you don't know," West responded.

Moody held strong against the idea of putting any further rate increase on the backs of NJUS customers. "If we keep raising the utility rate, it's going to get to the point where people in Nome can't afford to pay the bill," he said.

Emmons argued that although unpalatable, the fuel costs must be paid. "We can be nice guys forever until we don't have enough money to be nice guys anymore and have to close the doors," Emmons said. "We can't afford to give away the farm just because we'd like to. We have a responsibility to stay in business."

Since the Jan. 23 meeting was simply a work session, the board did not have the authority at the time to make a decision—nor did it have the will. As the meeting wrapped up, the consensus seemed to center on waiting until April to see if anything more would be known about the future of the Rock Creek Mine or whether any state funds may be available to help with the costs. Yet another work session slated for Jan. 26 was canceled.

However, as time passes and the less-expensive fuel is used up, the cost to factor in the fuel in the Crowley tanks will only climb. Part of the high cost of that fuel is based on its current location. Without any place to store the fuel otherwise, NJUS had to pay Crowley 36 cents a gallon to keep that fuel in its tanks. Handeland said NJUS will need to transfer that fuel over to its own tanks by June.

WARM DAYS, HIGH PRICES—Nome's power plant is seen last summer. During that season, Nome Joint Utility System purchased fuel for its generators as prices peaked. Now that the Rock Creek Mine has been idled, the utility is sitting on more fuel than it needs.

Hedging off the table

In the first of the two lunch work sessions last week, Handeland had proposed buying fuel on contract right now to take advantage of a price that is significantly lower than what was paid for what is currently in the tanks. The practice, called hedging, could save NJUS—and, in turn, its customers—a considerable amount of money if prices were to rise as they normally do come delivery time.

Hedging also carries the risk that prices will drop when the time comes for the fuel to be delivered; leaving the utility stuck with the higher price to which it had earlier committed itself.

"There's always the risk that the fuel will be less come June [or] July when we pick it up. But there's always the risk that it will be higher," Handeland said.

The board's time discussing the pros and cons of the practice turned out to be for naught. At the next day's session, Handeland reported to the board that the utility would not have the capacity in its tanks during the coming shipping season to allow it to hedge on fuel now. "We don't have any room to hedge, tank-wise," Handeland said at the Jan. 22 session.

NJUS wasn't the only one to buy more fuel than it needed, expecting the mine to take a bigger bite out of the supply than it has. Handeland said Nome's fuel suppliers also brought in more than needed. "We're all in the same boat right now," Handeland said. "We all brought in extra fuel and have no one to sell it to."

authorizing a second amendment to the agreement which changes the due date for the first payment from the first day of the month that begins 30 days from the date of execution of the agreement to 30 days from the date of execution of the agreement. "This could impact the date the first payment is due by as much as one month depending on the date all parties sign the agreement," the City's attorney Brooks Chandler wrote in a Jan. 23 memorandum to the Council. "For example, if all parties sign on the 31st of January, the first payment will be due March 2 rather than April 1."

From NOAA's perspective there are three other significant changes in the second amendment, Chandler said. (1) The characterization of the new bonds to be issued is changed from "modified" bonds to "refunding" bonds. (2) The City is required to provide NOAA with an opinion of its bond counsel that the NOAA bonds will have first priority over any other pledge of port revenues in the Port Facility Revenue Fund, and that the revenues to repay the bonds are not subject to any prior lien or pledge of those revenues. (3) A covenant regarding NOAA's general authority to enter into this agreement is replaced with a covenant that NOAA is entering into the agreement under its repayment assistance authority under federal law.

The Council approved fee waivers of $400 for use of the Mini Convention Center for the Bering Strait Development Council's tourism stakeholder meeting Jan. 27-28; $200 for use of the Mini Convention Center by the Nome Iron Dog Halfway Committee Feb. 11; and $4,250 for use of the Nome Recreation Center for the Kawerak Regional Conference Feb. 23-27.

City Manager's report

Evelyn Russo of Northwind Architects and Bahnke met last week to discuss a proposal for design work and construction administration services for the Nome-Beltz roof replacement project. Bahnke expects to submit a contract for the work to the Council at its meeting Feb. 9. She has submitted the City's application for the Nome-Beltz roof replacement project to the Alaska Municipal Bond Bank, which will meet Feb. 10 to consider applications.

Last year the Department of Homeland Security implemented the Transportation Workers Identification Credentials (TWIC) Program for all maritime personnel requiring unescorted access to secure areas within port facilities regulated under the Maritime Transportation Security Administration. Acting Harbormaster Joy Baker and Brett Farrell, assistant director of the Marine Exchange of Alaska, will enroll individuals in the TWIC Program Feb. 26-27 in Nome. It is estimated that 50 Nomeites will need these credentials for the 2009 shipping season.

Nome Volunteer Ambulance runs totaled 762 in 2008. Council member Mary Knodel said she is amazed at the number and she complimented the responders.

Letter draws attention

A letter from Nome Eskimo Community to Laura Samuelson, director of Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum, requesting an inventory of items held by the museum in accordance with the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA) drew a recommendation from Knodel to send the letter to an attorney.

NEC is a federally recognized tribe, and as a city museum, NAGPRA applies to the museum and its collections, Karlin Itchoak, president of the NEC Tribal Council, stated in his letter to Samuelson dated Jan. 7. "The Museum is in possession of artifacts from NOM-00146, and we would like a complete list of all objects recovered along with any photographs, notes and reports," Itchoak wrote. "We have reason to believe that NAGPRA applies to at least some, if not all, of the objects removed from this site."

"NAGPRA requires that the completion of inventories and summaries be undertaken with the full consultation of affected tribes," Itchoak continued. "After we receive the list and any supporting information, we may be able to provide descriptions and summaries that will further enrich everyone's knowledge of the items' historical value and cultural importance. It is only with the specialized knowledge of our elders that the Museum will be able to fulfill its duties under the law. Therefore, we request the inventory as soon as possible so that we may begin full consultation. It is critical to note that completion of the inventory will not relieve the Museum of any of its other duties with regard to any recovered items in your possession (including those from similar NEC affiliated sites)."

Public Safety Building

During a work session preceding the Council's regular meeting, Randy Romanesko provided a status report on the Public Safety Building construction project. The building will house the City's police department, volunteer ambulance services, an Emergency Operations Center and a training center.

The City has received funding of nearly $9.5 million for design, property acquisition and construction of the building, which is projected to cost approximately $9.4 million, Romanesko said. The cost figure does not include furniture, technology or equipment purchases.

Romanesko reports that pilings for the building have been installed, the pad is 90 percent complete, and the design will be finished in late February. An order has been placed for structural steel, steel joists and decking for delivery on the first barge scheduled to arrive in Nome this year. Hiring of local construction workers on the City payroll under force accounting should begin in April, with construction to start in June, Romanesko said. He predicts that construction will be completed in December 2010.

State releases energy guide in hopes of independence

Nome has the highest energy cost per capita in the Norton Sound region

By Diana Haecker

Leading the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region in energy costs per head, Nomeites spend $6,610 per year to heat their homes, use electricity and drive their cars, says a state document.

To get a handle on the complexities of energy in Alaska and to begin shaping an energy plan for the state, the Alaska Energy Authority last week released an inch-thick guide to energy in Alaska, called "Alaska Energy – a first step toward energy independence."

The report said Alaskans live in a state abundant in energy resources, "but are hampered by long distances and low usages."

This rings true for Nome and the Norton Sound and Bering Strait region, far off the road system, locked into last summer's record oil prices and in dire need for keeping the lights on, homes warm and affordable gas in the tank.

The guide was commissioned last year when Governor Sarah Palin appointed Steven Haagenson as the statewide energy coordinator and tasked him to identify and prioritize energy projects around the state. Haagenson, the Alaska Energy Authority and the Alaska Center for Energy and Power (ACEP) put the guide together. "This tool will focus each community on their relative options for generating electricity and heat through the use of locally available resources," said Haagenson.

Palin called on Alaskans, the Legislature, local and regional governments, the University of Alaska and the private sector to work together on the ambitious goal "to ensure that by 2025 half of the state's electricity comes from renewable sources."

Nome banks on wind

According to the guide – split in an 888-page long rural community assessment and a 245-page long narrative – the cost per capita for heat, electricity and transportation (gas) in Nome is $6,610 per year. This translates into an individual consumption of $2,406 for heat, $3,551 for electricity and $651 for transportation.

The guide identifies all of Nome's current electric costs at $12,409,411, its space heating costs at about $8,413,846 and estimates that Nomeites use $2,276,711 in gas for transportation. This brings the total for Nome's energy needs to $23 million. On the assumption of a price of $110 per barrel, the energy guide's analysis of Nome's electricity gives a price of $0.43/kWh for diesel, with alternatives of $0.46/kWh for a wind and diesel hybrid power generation and a $0.36/kWh for geothermal power.

The chart for heat generation puts wood as the cheapest heat source followed by diesel, geothermal and wind. Both wind and geothermal are according to the heat chart a too expensive heating option for Nome. Wind would cost $185.30 per million Btu, geothermal would cost $82.47 per million Btu, compared to diesel at $44.65 per million Btu. In comparison, Anchorage natural gas users pay $9.56 per million Btu delivered.

The formula is based on the estimated heating fuel cost per gallon times 9.05. "This factor comes from taking 1 million BTUs (British Thermal Units, the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of one pound of water 1°F) divided by the lower heating value of a gallon of heating fuel at (130,000 Btu/gallon) times an efficiency of 85 percent for heating oil appliances," explains the guide.

According to the math behind it, for heat, diesel and wood are still the top contenders in affordability.

The guide suggests power plant upgrades to improve the performance to a higher efficiency and diesel engine heat recovery measures. For alternative energy resources, the guide identifies geothermal at Pilgrim Hot Springs, both shallow and deep sources, and a wind and diesel hybrid plant.

"We identified wind as the best source for alternative energy," said

Mayor Denise Michels last Monday. While Pilgrim Hot Springs geothermal potential is often talked about, more data is needed to identify where the heat source of the hot springs is located. The Alaska Village Electric Cooperative requested $2,349,751 in grant funds from the state for a geothermal resource assessment.

The City of Nome and Nome Joint Utilities, long aware of the wind potential, requested $801,000 in grants for the $890,000 transmission line project from the newly built Banner Peak Wind Farm, a joint venture between Sitsnasuk and BSNC. NJUS also put in a request for state funding of a wind farm on Newton Peak for a wind-diesel hybrid project. "The governor recommended our requests to the legislature, and we just have to wait and see what the legislature picks and chooses," said Michels.

A shortcoming of the guide is the generic information presented under the community profiles. A short summary on the economy singles out NovaGold's idle Rock Creek mine as an economic factor, saying "NovaGold Resource's new mine at Rock Creek, 8 miles north of Nome, should be producing by 2006" and that it would require $40 million in investment and "is expected to create 100 jobs."

Surprisingly, the region's energy prices split in cost per capita are lower than Nome's cost. Following Nome in energy cost per head is Wales with $ 5,783 and Little Diomed with $5,649. An even bigger surprise is that Savoonga has the lowest annual cost per capita at $3,321. While one suspects that wind would be the number one feasible alternative for most places in the Bering Strait and Norton Sound area, wind and diesel hybrids are listed as cheaper alternatives to diesel. In Diomed, hydropower as in waves and tidal power generation were listed as alternatives.

"While lower crude oil prices are reducing the costs of energy today, we must remain committed to achieving energy security for our future economic well-being," Governor Sarah Palin said last week, when presenting the guide. However, lower crude oil prices passed on to customers on the road system, don't do anything for Nome and the surrounding communities locked in the high crude oil prices last summer. After peaking at over $140 per barrel in July 2008, prices collapsed to under $50 per barrel by December 2008.

Alternative energy funding requests for Nome

- Banner Wind Construction, Nome submitted by Banner Wind, LLC for a Wind Diesel Hybrid project. The total project budget is $5,157,000 with $4,126,000 requested in grant funding and $1,031,000 as matching funds.

- Geothermal Resource Assessment Seward Peninsula submitted by the Alaska Village Electric

Cooperative for a geothermal project. The total project budget is $4,600,000 with $4,301,950 requested in grant funding and $145,000 as matching funds.

- Nome Banner Peak Wind Farm Transmission Construction submitted by City of Nome, Nome Joint Utilities System for a transmission project. The total project budget is $890,000 with $801,000 requested in grant funding and $89,000 as matching funds.

- Nome/Newton Peak Wind Farm Construction submitted by City of Nome, NJUS for a Wind Diesel Hybrid project. The total project budget is $15,534,309 with $13,952,326 requested in grant funding and $1,582,983 as matching funds.

- Pilgrim Hot Springs Assessment submitted by the University of Alaska Fairbanks, Institute of Northern Engineering, Alaska Center for Energy and Power for a geothermal project. The total project budget is $2,349,751 with $2,349,751 requested in grant funding.

North Pacific Research Board probes deep into the Bering Sea

By Diana Haecker

ANCHORAGE—Dangerous and bountiful, the Bering Sea is home of the most plentiful fisheries in the world, providing half the seafood consumed by Americans. It also is the place where dramatic changes take place as arctic warming trends extend to the footsteps of residents in the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region.

More than 600 marine scientists gathered last week at the Alaska Marine Science Symposium held in Anchorage, presenting their studies over five days in back-to-back, 15-minute presentations covering everything from herring, cod and pollock studies to protein assimilation of the phytoplankton in the Chukchi Sea to the impact of diminishing sea ice on marine mammals.

The overall picture: climate change is real and fuels the need for a slew of studies and research. The North Pacific Research Board and the National Science Foundation poured $52 million into an ongoing six-year study of the eastern Bering Sea—from north of the Aleutians to St. Lawrence Island. The National Science Foundation is pushing research to understand how the Bering Sea may respond to climate change and the changes in seasonal ice cover.

Nora Deans, outreach director with the NPRB said that 652 scientists registered to be part of the symposium, hailing from Canada, the mainland United States, Russia, Alaska and other circum arctic nations.

The symposium was infused with an upbeat energy after President Barack Obama's inauguration speech thousands of miles away on Tuesday, Jan. 20. Federal scientists were elated to hear him talk about a renewed commitment to science and funding. "It was very encouraging to hear science mentioned as a basis for setting policy," commented Peter Boveng with the national Marine Mammal Laboratory. Dr. Suzann Speckman with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service added that lack of funding was the reason why USFWS has not filed the so-called 90-day finding, or a response to the Center for Biological Diversity's petition to list walrus as an endangered species yet.

The director of the Eskimo Walrus Commission, Nome's Vera Metcalf, said that she soaks up all the scientific information at the meeting and tries to build bridges from the focused scientist to communities with traditional knowledge about the studied species. "I try to bridge the gap and show how communities can be part of scientific studies," Metcalf said. "We found that scientists are more and more interested in traditional knowledge. Our subsistence hunters know migration routes and can tell from observations the health of a species. I like to see more and more community-based projects and how we can be part of the research and part of the solution."

She said that she teamed up with the North Slope Borough's department of wildlife management, believing that only in cooperation with other entities can progress be made. She said that together with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, the University of Alaska at Fairbanks and the North Slope Borough, the walrus commission is now in the process of studying the health of the species through a blubber sampling program.

Confirming what the International Panel on Climate Change assessed three years ago, James Overland with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration presented a grim picture in terms of sea ice loss. The summer of 2008 was the second summer of extreme minimum arctic sea ice extent, causing Overland to say he did not believe the arctic sea ice would return to its thick multi-year ice state of the 1980s. However, he also noted that it may take several warm years like 2007 to continue the sea ice decline, pushing the expected date for a nearly sea ice free Arctic to 2030.

Nick Bond, research meteorologist with the University of Washington, examined how oceanographic conditions in the fall season pan out in the light of global climate change. His take-home message, "From the present to about 2050, climate change will most likely be dominated by thermodynamics, the temperature of the water and its salinity, rather than dynamic effects, such as wind," Bond said. What that means for fisheries, sea mammals and nutrients in the sea, nobody knows quite yet. But loss of sea ice, later forming seasonal ice and earlier breakup times pose problems for ice-dependent creatures.

Carleton Ray, marine mammal researcher with the University of Virginia, noted that his analysis indicated that diminished sea ice and alterations in position, extent and structure of sea ice seascapes has caused the Bering Sea to become a mixing bowl where ice floes are free-moving within diminishing habitat. "For walruses, diminished winter-spring ice increases the energetic costs of migration and may affect reproductive behavior. Loss of summer ice threatens female-calf nursing habitat," Ray found. For ribbon seals, he said that diminished sea ice disrupts reproduction and molting, with consequences for pup survival.

Peter Boveng, program leader of the Polar Ecosystem Program with NOAA's National Marine Mammal Laboratory, said that this may be the case, but not to the extent that the ribbon seal's situation warrants an endangered species listing. "While the multi-year ice in the Arctic Ocean is melting, the seasonal ice that ribbon seals need in the spring is still forming in the Bering Sea," he said. "We believe that the seasonal ice is still reliable in the foreseeable future, but we also expect that there will be reduced survival of adults or pups due to early breakup."

"There will be gradual declines in survival over the long term, but it's very uncertain how long that might be. We also don't know how capable ribbon seals are to adapt by shifting their range north or by finding other ways to adjust to change." While he conceded that a total population number of the species has not been determined, their numbers range in the hundreds of thousands, he said. Part of the difficulty to get reliable data on their numbers is the fact that their habitat extends to the Sea of Okhotsk and his Russian scientific counterparts suffer the same obstacles: the lack of money to pay for expensive helicopter survey flights to count seals.

Boveng said that the recent finding that ribbon seals are not qualifying as an endangered species is not the last word on the issue. "We need to know more about the seals, and it doesn't mean that we turn our back on ribbon seals. They are a species of concern and the agency will continue to increase monitoring, research and more frequent assessments," he said.

Federal managers travel to Nome to hear bycatch concerns

By Laurie McNicholas

Residents of the Bering Strait region discussed proposals for limiting Chinook (king) salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery with representatives of the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and the National Marine Fisheries Service Jan. 22 at Nome Eskimo Community.

In 2007, 122,000 Chinook salmon were caught by commercial fishermen who were fishing for other species—a problem known as "bycatch." Many thousands of those salmon would have probably would have returned to rivers in western Alaska. The high Chinook bycatch numbers spurred the NPFMC to develop proposals to reduce and minimize the pollock fishery's Chinook bycatch.

In Nome, NPFMC Fisheries Analyst Nicole Kimball outlined the responsibilities of the council, its staff and advisory committee. The NPFMC and NMFS together manage fisheries in federal waters from three to 200 miles off Alaska's coast. The NPFMC makes recommendations to the NMFS, and the NMFS approves, implements and enforces them. Kimball said the council had participated in public meetings last fall in Bethel, Dillingham, Kotzebue, McGrath and Nenana. She also said she hopes the full council will meet in Nome in June 2011.

About 40 persons filled a meeting room at NEC, while others in several villages participated via a real-time video teleconference set up with assistance from Heidi Herter, University of Alaska Fairbanks Marine Advisory Program agent in Nome.

During a 40-minute PowerPoint presentation, NPFMC Plan Coordinator Diana Stram summarized issues, findings and proposed management alternatives in the council's draft Environmental Impact Statement on Bering Sea Chinook salmon bycatch management.

The bycatch of Chinook salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery started a sharp upward trend early in this decade and averaged 82,311 fish annually from 2003 through 2007. By law, bycatch is counted but cannot be retained or sold. Some salmon is donated to food banks, but most Chinook salmon taken as bycatch in the pollock fishery are returned dead to the sea. The Chinook bycatch and its discard rate acutely concern subsistence and commercial fishers in Norton Sound and elsewhere in Western Alaska who have faced severely diminished runs of Chinook salmon in their rivers in recent years.

The 2008 Norton Sound Chinook salmon run was the poorest return on record, reported Jim Menard, area management biologist for Norton Sound and Kotzebue for the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, in a news release dated Nov. 4, 2008. Last year in the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts, no directed commercial Chinook salmon fishery took place, and the subsistence and sport fisheries closed early, he added. Menard said directed commercial Chinook fishery has occurred in only one year since 2001 in the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts.

Stram said scientists don't know why the Chinook salmon bycatch dramatically increased from 2003 to 2007, but the reasons may involve changing oceanographic conditions or changing fishing practices.

In 2008 the numbers of Chinook taken as bycatch in the pollock fishery dropped dramatically to 19,477 fish, but the Council continued to fast-track development of a plan to manage Chinook bycatch. Under the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA), the council and NMFS must consider all national standards, including:

- Minimize salmon bycatch to the extent possible;
- prevent over fishing while achieving, on a continuing basis, the optimum yield from each fishery (for example, the Bering Sea pollock fishery); and
- provide for the sustained participation and of and minimize adverse impacts on fishing communities.

Stram noted that the requirement to consider all of the sometimes conflicting national standards set forth in the MSA tends to lead the council toward a middle ground in its decision making process.

Management alternatives narrowed

preferred preliminary alternative (alternative 4) to reduce and minimize salmon bycatch regardless of annual abundance. Alternative 4 would:

- set a high bycatch cap of 68,392 Chinook salmon for participants in a pollock industry incentive program to reduce bycatch below cap levels—if the council approves such a program—and set a lower “backstop” cap of 32,482 Chinook salmon for vessels that do not participate in an incentive program; OR

- set a low cap of 47,591 Chinook salmon if the council does not approve an incentive program.

The council plans to review industry incentive proposals at a meeting Feb. 4-10 in Seattle. Alternative 4 involves high- and low-cap management for the A season (winter) and B season (fall) as follows:

- The cap would be divided between A (70 percent) and B (30 percent) seasons;

- 80 percent of remaining A season caps could be rolled over (made available) to the B season in the same calendar year;

- caps would be allocated to the four pollock fishing sectors (Community Development Quota, inshore catcher vessels, mothership sector and offshore catcher processors). (The Community Development Quota is 10 percent of the annual total allowable catch of Bering Sea pollock, which the council allocates to the Western Alaska CDQ Program, comprised of six entities representing a total of 65 villages.)

- Sectors could transfer caps among sectors in a given season.

Transferable sector and cooperative level caps will require 100 percent observer coverage for management.

Chinook salmon genetic data from a 2008 study are aggregated into nine groups for use in impact analysis in the EIS. The Coastal Western Alaska group includes the lower Yukon, Kuskokwim and Bristol Bay. Norton Sound is in the Coastal Western Alaska genetics grouping, but can't be resolved separately. The draft EIS includes estimated impacts on Western Alaska Chinook salmon returns, economic impacts on salmon fishery management and economic impacts on the pollock fishery (primarily in foregone revenue) under alternative levels of bycatch caps.

The original due date of Feb. 3 for public comments on the draft EIS has been extended to Feb. 23. The council is scheduled to take final action on a Bering Sea Chinook salmon bycatch management plan at a meeting in April in Anchorage. The plan is to be implemented in January 2011.

Economic benefits of pollock

Two council members helped facilitate discussion at the Nome meeting—council chairman Eric Olson, who was born and raised in Dillingham, and Bill Tweit of the Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife. The council includes representatives from the states of Alaska, Washington and Oregon. Olson said he has worked for CDQ entities for 13 years, beginning with the Bristol Bay

Economic Development Corp.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., which receives 2.2 percent of the Bering Sea pollock total allowable catch, represents 15 Bering Strait villages in the CDQ program. Representing NSEDC at the meeting were five board members, including chairman and president Dan Harrelson, and four staff members. Several representatives of the pollock industry from outside Alaska also attended the meeting, including John Bundy, president of Glacier Fish Co., which harvests more than 6 percent of the Bering Sea pollock catch. GFC has harvested NSEDC's annual CDQ pollock allocation since 1992. NSEDC currently owns 37.5 percent of GFC.

Noting that pollock harvests have contributed to the economy of Norton Sound since 1992, Bundy called for joint efforts by the pollock industry and communities to work toward a creative balance in Chinook bycatch management. The key is to use incentives to drive the bycatch down, he added.

He said he does not want to equate money with cultural values, but wants listeners to know what pollock contributes to the regional economy. Bundy said that in 2007 NSEDC received income of $18.5 million from harvest royalties and distributions, and in the same year pollock industry employees from the region earned millions of dollars. He said NSEDC spent $800,000 on salmon enhancement and more than $4 million to run seafood processing plants in Nome and Unalakleet in 2007, supported cultural activities in the region, gave every rate payer in the region who asked $500 for their household electricity bills this winter and distributed a $100,000 Community Benefit share to each of its member communities. “It’s not pollock versus Chinook; we have a common problem and need to work on it,” Bundy concluded.

Nome resident Tim Smith questioned Bundy’s $800,000 figure for salmon enhancement, saying that he has asked NSEDC for information on that topic but has received no answer. None of the NSEDC board members or staff present at the meeting contradicted Smith. However, NSEDC’s 2007 Form 990 return to the Internal Revenue Service lists an expenditure of $889,231 for salmon rehabilitation and enhancement projects under the heading “Statement of Program Service Accomplishments.”

Are bycatch caps effective?

Commenting on estimated salmon bycatch under various alternatives in the EIS, Smith questioned how bycatch of Norton Sound salmon can be managed if Norton Sound salmon stocks are not identified in the by-catch. He said Chinook and chum salmon stocks in Norton Sound rivers are so low that any high seas interception of Chinook and chum bound for Norton Sound rivers will prevent their recovery. “None of these options will do us any good,” he said. “For the last few years I’ve operated a hatchery, and I think that may help. A bycatch cap won’t help us.”

Tweit said if you put Norton Sound salmon in a box in the ocean and say, “don’t fish here,” it won’t work because fish move. “What can the council do to get each skipper to avoid catching Chinook salmon on the first and last day of the season?” he asked. He said zero is the only right number for salmon bycatch. “Which will work and get fishermen not to relax when salmon numbers are low in the sea?”

At another point in the meeting Tweit said he is concerned that a bycatch cap would be fished up to the cap level every year. “I’ve never heard a skipper say he likes to catch Chinook,” he added. “They are proud of the clean fishery label.” Tweit said that the lower the Chinook cap, the more likely a race for pollock will occur that results in dirty fishing. Noting that he is not speaking for the council, Tweit said he is trying to think through as many layers as he can. “It’s not us/them,” he said. “They want pollock caught in the ocean, Chinook in the river.”

Steve Ivanoff of Unalakleet said he doesn’t like the bycatch cap concept, but favors a trade concept in which any bycatch over a threshold could be taxed, and taxes could be used for several purposes, such as subsidies for food and fuel costs. Olson replied that if the council were to assess fines for bycatch, they would be obligated to put the proceeds in an NMFS fund and could not assign them to a particular area.

Is scientific data lacking?

Robert Keith of Elim, chairman of the Kawerak Inc. board of directors, expressed concern about the lack of scientific information for adequate analysis in the EIS, noting that climate change adds great variability.

Stram said the analysis goes through a rigorous review by the scientific community. She said lots of comments on the EIS question why the most recent genetic studies were chosen for the analysis instead of a different study. Published information from scientific statistical studies in available on the council website, she added.

Keith asked if there is a lack of scientific data, and if we need to get more scientific studies done. Stram said it can be beneficial to focus comments on what is not known. Tweit said the need for baseline genetic studies of

Korean team takes tae kwon do to the village

By Tyler Rhodes

After watching six talented Korean university students break boards with their fists, execute soaring kicks in perfect synchronization and slice apples with their feet while performing back flips, it's no wonder that the audience members—both young and old—in Nome and area villages want to learn how to do the same.

Dan Scholten is happy to oblige them.

Scholten—or Master Dan, as he is known in these parts—has brought the half dozen Korean tae kwon do experts to the region as part of a program to introduce the martial art to residents of rural Alaska. Several years in the making, the Bering Strait Taekwondo Project is being implemented in conjunction with the Bering Strait School District in St. Michael, Savoonga, Unalakleet, Stebbins, Koyuk and Golovin.

"I felt that teaching tae kwon do in remote isolated communities would have an immense impact, not just on students, but for the community," said Scholten, who has studied tae kwon do for 37 years. "The teaching methods improve academic testing levels, period. Attendance improves in a short period of time, other issues in the community just turn around."

While Scholten has organized the program, the actual teaching work will be handled by the students from Han Zhong University in South Korea. The young teachers, ranging in age from 20 to 24 years old, have so far been received like rock stars in the villages.

Just as when they were in Nome, Scholten has the Korean team give demonstrations for the schools and then for the entire community in each village. After nearly every performance, the team is surrounded by a throng of children who are holding the remnants of the boards that were destroyed by a foot or fist. They all want their board signed.

"I know they're all overwhelmed by small children," Scholten said of the team.

To Scholten's pleasure, many of those autograph-seekers are also signing their own names as they enroll in the program right there on the spot. "We had 120 training at one time in Savoonga," he said. Scholten said a sign-up and preliminary lesson are conducted right as the demonstration ends.

So far the response has been stronger than Scholten anticipated. He initially expected to have 500 students in the region sign up for the program. When Scholten visited the offices of The Nome

Nugget last week, he was only half way through his village tour to set up the program. At that time he reported 400 had already enrolled. "It's a higher turnout than I had anticipated," he said. "I'd say we're short 500 uniforms right now."

As of press time, the program had traveled to Savoonga, Unalakleet and St. Michael, with students and adults signing on for the classes in all three. Scholten said interested parties can join the program at any time.

Scholten believes tae kwon do can play a role in improving people's lives. "The tae kwon do martial art, it gives the kid the value system where they have the desire to better themselves," Scholten said. "They're not allowed to train or progress in rank if they're not performing well at home or at school. That's what it is; they like this so much they're willing to do the work."

A leap of faith

While tae kwon do may be new for the six selected villages, moving to the village is akin to arriving on another planet entirely for the instructors. As the team travels from town to town, it leaves behind one member each time. The team will not be reunited until May when they will assemble in Nome with many of their new students for a regional tournament.

"It was hard for us to leave the first one behind. It's like breaking up your family," Scholten said of dropping off Jung Ho Choi in Savoonga. "We didn't have winter clothes yet. He was at the airport wrapped in a blanket, and he wouldn't leave."

The instructors have since received appropriate clothing for the climate.

Outside of the team's leader, Jae Young Park, this is the first trip to the United States for the young instructors who are still working on their English. Park, 24, who spoke for his peers while visiting The Nugget's offices said the language barrier does make the team a little nervous. Park also said it has been colder than he expected.

Park said he thought the villages would be small, but found them to actually be larger than he expected. He also said residents of the villages he has so far visited have been very kind and nice.

Other aspects of life in rural Alaska, like flying in bush planes, have also added an element of excitement to the trip—welcomed or not. The instructors have enjoyed seeing wildlife, such as moose and fox, and some have been able to travel the country a bit by snowmachine.

For all the new experiences the instructors will encounter, there will also inevitably come some pangs of homesickness. Outside the separation from friends and loved ones, perhaps the most telling sign that one is far from home is that of cuisine. Park said the instructors have enjoyed eating pizza and liked the muktuk they were offered. However, much of what they will be served at the schools will be different from what they normally eat. Scholten said the instructors' diet usually packs a little more kick. "Hot spice is really like lifeblood for them— keeps them healthy," he said.

While in the villages, Scholten said the instructors will also help with physical education classes and spend some time as students, themselves. The instructors will be working on their English.

This group of instructors will be paving the way for 11 more who will come in May. Scholten has scheduled a regional tournament, or HanMaDang, at that time at which he expects 300 students from the villages to participate. The tournament will also signal the changing of the guard as this first group of instructors bid Alaska goodbye.

The new instructors will live and work with Scholten during the summer before heading out to the villages, adding five more to the roster. Scholten envisions that after five years, the program will be self-sustaining since each village should have by that time second- or third-degree black belts who can assume the role of instructor.

Effort spanned years

This is not the first time Scholten had worked to bring tae kwon do to the region's villages. He said he previously worked on several pilot programs, teaching the classes himself. Scholten's last solo effort was in 2004 when he lived in Shishmaref for a period of time to teach.

"It's been a journey in finding out how can we teach in this region," Scholten said.

That journey has taken Scholten around the world. He said he connected with Dr. Seong Hyun Nam, the head master of the Han Zhong University program, after building a relationship with another grand master in Iowa. Grand Master Young Chin Pak connected Scholten with Nam who eventually provided some of his students to help establish the Bering Strait Taekwondo project. "These are his personal students that he has selected on our behalf and will continue to supply as we go on with this program," Scholten said of Nam.

He also said he would like to be able to return the favor to Korea by eventually sending some of our region's cultural ambassadors to Korea. "Our big first goal is bringing some students from the villages and Native dance groups to the World HanMaDang in Korea," he said.

Nanooks stopped in their tracks on the winner's trail

Nanooks split weekend series with the Whalers

The Nome boys basketball team's winning streak came to an end this weekend in Barrow.

Since only suffering one loss early this season, the Nanooks have appeared unstoppable, often rolling over their opposition. The Whalers proved as big as their name, however, fighting the Nanooks to a 1-point loss on Friday and beating Nome by 5 on Saturday.

Nome's narrow 59-58 victory Jan. 23 was the fruit of a fourth-quarter rally that saw the Nanooks sink five 3-pointers. Helping to eat up that 10-point deficit from the end of the third quarter, Jesse Blandford put down 12 of his 19 total points in the fourth quarter.

Jeremy Head led Nome overall with 21 for the game. Albert Gerke scored 15 to lead the Whalers.

On Saturday, the Whalers Justin Sanders came alive in the fourth, scoring 16 of his 21 points to lead Barrow to its 52-47 win. Barrow led by 1 at the half and maintained that margin through the end of the third quarter. The Whalers were able to outpace the Nanooks to the finish line to hand Nome its second loss of the season.

Blandford led Nome in scoring with 24 points. Head followed up with 10. Mikey Wongittilin scored 6 in the first half for Nome and Christian Leckband drained a three-pointer in the first quarter and scored another 2 points in the fourth to finish with 5 for the game.

Nome came home from Barrow with a season record of 11-2.

The Nanooks will host the Dillingham Wolverines this weekend. The junior high boys will take the court at 5:30 p.m. both Friday and Saturday evenings, while the varsity squads will square off at 7 p.m. both nights.

Lady Nanooks take their game to Dillingham next weekend

MAKING HER MOVE—Liz Sherman-Luce works for two on Saturday evening against Barrow at home. Sherman-Luce scored 5 points in the game.

The Lady Whalers brought their A-game to Nome last weekend, dispatching the Lady Nanooks two nights in a row.

Barrow controlled the court with a 52-34 win Friday evening, following up with a 64-44 victory.

In Friday's action, Vanessa Tahbone led Nome in the home-court effort with 9 points, 5 of those coming off the free-throw line. In all, the Lady Nanooks scored 13 from the line, a spot where Nome's Richelle Horner stood several times. Horner added 8 points, six of those from free-throws. Rachael Bauman sunk a 3-pointer for the Lady Nanooks, ending the game with 5.

Jaleen Simmonds led Barrow in the game with hot shooting from outside. Simmonds nailed four 3-pointers for 12 of her 14 total points. Ganiinna Pili and Nicole Smith both added 11 for the Lady Whalers.

The scores were higher, but the margin of loss even greater, Saturday night for Nome. Tahbone again led Nome with 19 total points. She was a perfect 6-for-6 from the line and scored one 3-pointer. Horner added 9, while Liz Luce and AnnieKate Olson each put up 5.

Barrow's Pili was the high scorer of the game with 22 points. Michelle Simmonds added 10 for the Lady Whalers.

Nome's record dropped to 6-4 with the loss.

The Lady Nanooks will hit the road next weekend, flying to Dillingham for two games.

Like too many Alaskans, I lost a son to suicide.

YOU KNOW me...

Because I don't want others to hurt the way I hurt inside, suicide prevention has become my passion.

On my mother's tribal blanket, the courageous Coho salmon fights dangerous waters. Its message empowers me. I no longer stay quietly in the background. I speak out and watch for those who are hurting.

Tragically, people considering suicide often feel incapable of talking to those they love the most. That's why we must all learn to recognize the signs of suicide risk and be ready to prevent it.

Pinewood Derby

By Julianne Bourdon
Racers got together for the annual Boy Scout Pinewood Derby held at the elementary school Jan. 24. The cars were handcrafted by the boys themselves with dads supervising. Some of the cars that were racing were designed after the Batmobile, a Nintendo Wii controller, the Nanook, General Lee and Hageland. The cars were registered and weighed before the race, with each car needing to weigh at most 5 ounces. Family and friends enjoyed the fun and excitement of each race. Thanks to all who helped, parents, den leaders and the boys for participating.

110-year-old map one of the region's oldest

By Tyler Rhodes

Laura Samuelson traced the line marking the Snake River on the nearly 110-year-old map, reading the names of the creeks from south to north as her finger swept by them.

As she passed Sunset, Monument and Boulder creeks, she noted that more than a century later the names remain the same on the replica of the map recently acquired by the University of Alaska Fairbanks Rasmuson Library.

Copyrighted on Nov. 18, 1899, the map is likely one of the earliest of the region and was made to draw gold-seekers to the southern half of the Seward Peninsula. Made just before the big rush in Nome, the map shows an overview of the southern peninsula and what it labels as the Cape Nome, Bonanza and Cape York mining districts. "They were promotional maps to get people up here, especially the gold miners," said Samuelson, director of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum in Nome. "People had to be assured that they were coming to a real gold strike."

Samuelson said she first learned of the map's existence from a bookseller in Juneau. The bookseller had been in contact with an antiquities dealer in the Lower 48 who possessed the map. With an asking price of $8,500, Samuelson passed up the chance to acquire the map. "I think the price was exorbitant and that the money was better spent elsewhere," she said. "Ninety-eight percent of the stuff we have here is donated. We don't do a lot of purchasing."

Samuelson, however, mentioned the map to Rasmuson archivist Anne Foster later at a historical meeting. With funds from the Rasmuson Foundation, the map, which sold for 50 cents in 1899, was added to the library's collection for nearly $9,000. "This is supposed to be one of the earliest maps of the region, produced rather rapidly with the idea of attracting people into the area," said Tamara Lincoln, curator of rare maps and books at the University of Alaska Fairbanks Rasmuson Library.

While the original will stay in Fairbanks, a copy is now in Nome at the museum. Samuelson said it will soon be framed and put on display. The map is also available for view on the state's online archives, which can be accessed at vilda.alaska.edu.

Produced by the Nome Map Co., the map was drawn around the time Nome officially accepted its moniker. The town was originally called Anvil City but was required to change its name by the post office in September 1899 to avoid being confused with Anvik on the lower Yukon. The map notes both names for the town site.

Gustaf Nordblom, the map's creator, is named on the map as a civil engineer. He studied art in Paris and may have operated under two names, according to Lincoln. "He is a typical representative of the people that the Alaska gold fields attracted. He is cited here as a civil engineer, which tells me that throughout his lifetime he reinvented himself several times," Lincoln said.

The map was purchased with its original envelope, which bore advertising from the San Francisco-based J.S. Kimball Co. that boasted ownership of several steamers. The envelope copy attempts to persuade miners and other travelers to venture from San Francisco and Seattle to the gold fields. It offers prospective miners 550 safe deposit boxes in a vault at Nome. The company even offered trips to Siberia.

The maps primarily show the area's rivers and tributaries, areas where gold miners would be drawn to try their luck. "The Bonanza Mining District, which is east of Nome, is by far the largest section of the map," said Terrence Cole, professor of history at UAF. "Historically, of course, that's much less important than the Council area and Nome itself. This is not Nome, but Cape Nome, so it's really before the Nome stampede."

THERE'S GOLD IN THOSE RIVERS—Museum director Laura Samuelson looks over a reproduction of a 1899 map of the goldfields of the southern Seward Peninsula. The original map was recently purchased by UAF's Rasmuson Library for $8,500.

TREASURE MAP (Left)—The 1899 map focused on three areas of the Seward Peninsula in an effort to entice fortune-seekers north.

Chinook salmon is receiving attention from several organizations.

Cultural concerns aired

Austin Ahmasuk, Nome Eskimo Community's Tribal Resources Specialist, asked what happens with a majority of the Chinook salmon bycatch. Tweit said many salmon taken as bycatch are young feeder fish with little meat and their flesh becomes worthless quickly. In many cases, Chinook salmon that are sorted out from tons of pollock are not fit for human consumption, but some are, and the industry is working on logistics such as transporting them, she added.

"Food bank salmon never comes to our village," said Charles Saccheus, NSEDC board member from Elim. He asked how villagers can become involved in the program. Glenn Reed of Pacific Seafood Processing said he serves on the board of an organization that deals with donated fish and he is willing to work with persons who want to access the program. Ahmasuk said after the meeting Reed told him that only 10 percent of Chinook salmon taken as bycatch is donated in some form.

Jerry Ivanoff of Unalakleet said subsistence fishers in eastern Norton Sound want to be able to teach young people how to do Chinook salmon strips and store them. "Without kings, we can't do that," he noted. "Our culture will die."

Noting that others at the meeting had stressed the importance of subsistence to the culture and economy of communities, Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, social scientist with Kawerak Inc., said the draft EIS has not taken that into consideration adequately. She said the document refers to the rural subsistence economy as an underground economy, which sounds illegal—like a black market.

She said the pollock industry analysis in the EIS shows what the industry would forego under various bycatch cap levels, but does not show the impacts of forgone subsistence fish. "The Environmental Justice portion of the draft EIS does not spend enough time on coastal community impacts; it's unbalanced," she added. "Kawerak wants more attention focused on these matters."

Olson asked Raymond-Yakoubian to help the council find ways to improve the document. She suggested that the Council (1) use tribal liaisons as information pipelines, and (2) add a social scientist to the council staff.

Rose Fosdick, vice president of Kawerak's Natural Resources Division, said Kawerak spends a lot of time working with communities on subsistence issues. "We can't live without subsistence salmon," she said. She said the EIS lacks information about the impacts of Chinook bycatch on subsistence fishers. "How are we going to put our voice in?" she asked.

"You put your voice in the product with your comments here," Olson assured Fosdick.

"If the information in the EIS is inadequate, we want to hear that," said Sally Bibb, CDQ coordinator for NMFS. "We also hear there is a big problem and action is needed right now." She asked whether Kawerak recommends taking more time to include the information they say should be added to the EIS. "We can't act on bycatch and incorporate your comments at the same time," she noted.

Stram said it would be helpful to receive ideas on how better to characterize information.

Fosdick said Kawerak is recording local knowledge and will be ready in a year and a half.

"The comments you made today will be folded into the EIS," Kimball said.

"It seems to be a work in progress," observed Perry Mendenhall of Nome. "For now a lot is unknown." The public meeting began at 9 a.m. and ended shortly after noon.

NMFS, tribal entities consult

At 1 p.m. on Jan. 22 representatives of Kawerak, NEC and Elim and Unalakleet tribal entities met for private consultation with Bibb and Jon Kurland, director of the NMFS Alaska Region Habitat Conservation Division. The division works with stakeholder groups and others to offset adverse effects on Essential Fish Habitat and living marine resources in Alaska.

In an interview with The Nome Nugget following the meeting, Raymond-Yakoubian said the tribal groups had given Bibb and Kurland their views and recommendations and hope the effort leads to open lines of communication. She said council representatives attended the meeting to listen.

In regard to Bibb's question whether Kawerak recommends taking more time to include more information in the EIS, Raymond-Yakoubian said she told NMFS that is a false choice between improving the EIS to reflect good analysis and delaying a final decision by the council in April. A delay in the decision would delay implementation of a management plan in January 2011, she noted.

She said she believes Kawerak prompted the council's decision to meet with residents in six rural areas to discuss Chinook bycatch issues in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. "Kawerak has been sending them letters telling them that people don't know what's going on, and we have to educate them; you should be educating them," she added. "The other thing we are concerned about is they already have preliminary alternatives in place for managing non-Chinook bycatch. We requested tribal consultation on that issue." Nearly all of the non-Chinook salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery is comprised of chum salmon, an important species in the Norton Sound area.

Both Raymond-Yakoubian and Ahmasuk say they are happy that Bibb and Kurland consulted with them. Ahmasuk said NEC requested quite a bit of information as soon as possible. "I have been speaking with Sally [Bibb] ever since September of last year regularly," he added. "The EIS is so complicated; there are hundreds of different alternatives."

Ahmasuk said the council provided an extremely valuable community service for people of the region by holding a public meeting on the draft EIS in Nome.

Radical Hospitality. What do you think of when you hear these words? Aren't we, as Christians, supposed to simply believe the right things and we will be saved? That's what many churches teach after all. Martin Luther even identified the role of clergy as being to "preach the word and administer the sacraments." Not much about radical hospitality here.

According to Bishop Robert Schnase, the author of The Five Practices of Fruitful Congregations, we shouldn't stop at "friendly" hospitality; we need to exhibit a hospitality which is "extraordinary, exceptional, thorough, and extreme." In other words radical.

As I was surfing the web recently, I came across a letter posted to a popular internet forum for Christians from a young lady who had visited a church. She had been sent home by the pastor for wearing casual attire. This is how she ends the letter:

"Walking out of the church, I felt very, very hurt and angry. So THIS was how Jesus REALLY felt about me! I would never go to church again, I decided.

Although I returned to church about two years later, I still find it nearly impossible to go on a Sunday due to the aforementioned incident."

One sentence stands out: "So THIS was how Jesus REALLY felt about me!" We might be uncomfortable in thinking that we are representatives of Christ. But it is through the church and through individual believers that God touches people's lives.

I believe that is what Paul is talking about in the reading from Romans. If we only invite those who are near to us, who we already know, respect, and love, how are we going to transform the world? If we don't show God's love, God's peace to those who persecute us, to those who are lowly, who is going to show them God's love?

How better to show radical hospitality, than to share God's grace with one who persecutes you. God requires that we show the same level of hospitality to all people, regardless of who they are, even those who persecute us. This is how we participate in God's transformation of the world. I will now share an experience to illustrate this.

I served as a project manager in Iraq from May through November, 2004. Our Iraqi co-workers, or hosts, had not known peace since about 1980 when the Iran-Iraq war began. But yet, their hospitality was incredible. It is a part of their culture that we the Church need to emulate. They wanted to make sure we knew about their country through sharing food with us, taking us to numerous historical and tourist sorts of sites within the Green Zone, and other opportunities. It was humbling that these people, who had nothing, would give everything for us, who were occupiers of their land. This is the sort of radical hospitality that Paul speaks of in his letter to the Romans.

HOROSCOPES

January 29 - February 4, 2009

 CAPRICORN December 22–January 19 Shucks, Capricorn. The answer you've been seeking has been right in front of you all along. No need to get your feathers ruffled. Fix the problem and start on the next one.	 ARIES March 21–April 19 Affairs of the heart wreak havoc at home. Step in and play mediator, Aries, or prepare for the situation to get blown way out of proportion. A transportation matter resolves itself.	 CANCER June 22–July 22 Get real, Cancer. You don't have the resources to take on such a task. Be honest with yourself and let someone else have the glory. A question at home catches you off guard.	 LIBRA September 23–October 22 Believe it or not, but a friend really has changed, Libra. They are on the right path, and this time, they won't stray from it. Cheer them on!
 AQUARIUS January 20–February 18 Party time, Aquarius. A family issue is resolved, and you benefit in multiple ways. A walk down memory lane uncovers a mystery. Get ready to do a little snooping.	 TAURUS April 20–May 20 Keep a close eye on that special someone, Taurus. They are up to something. A home improvement project is calling your name. Time to get out the toolbelt.	 LEO July 23–August 22 Stay on top of things at work, Leo. Your supervisor may be taking stock of you. A momentous occasion calls for a momentous celebration.	 SCORPIO October 23–November 21 Relaxation time, Scorpio. You have given everything you got, and before you can go any further, you need to rejuvenate. Go ahead and take up that friend's travel offer.
 PISCES February 19–March 20 Ready or not, here they come, Pisces. Roll out the red carpet for your guests and treat them like royalty. They will return the favor sooner than you think.	 GEMINI May 21–June 21 Push on, Gemini. The end to a project is closer than you think. A friend comes calling. Be frank with them. Coddling is not what they need right now.	 VIRGO August 23–September 22 Beauty is in the eye of the beholder. Remember that, Virgo, on your next shopping adventure. You may just find a valuable treasure. A slip of the tongue gets you into trouble at work.	 SAGITTARIUS November 22–December 21 Geez, Sagittarius. You really have done enough for a young family member. Step back and give them some space to sort out things on their own.

Trooper Beat

On January 15, at approximately 5 p.m., Nome AST received a report of a possible assault in the village of St. Michael. AST investigation is ongoing as witnesses are being contacted.

On January 16, at approximately 7:17 p.m., Stebbins VPO Delbert Acoman contacted Nome AST to report two overdue snowmachiners. It was reported that Michael Pete, 19, of Stebbins, and Nathan Pete, 21, of Stebbins, had departed Kotlik at approximately 3:30 p.m., during blizzard conditions to travel to Stebbins. Michael and Nathan were traveling together on a single snowmachine and had appropriate winter gear. A hasty team was sent from Stebbins and the pair were located at approximately 9:30 p.m., in good condition. It was determined that the snowmachine had run out of fuel. Michael and Nathan were provided fuel and escorted to Stebbins without incident. Nome AST thank the Stebbins Search volunteers for a quick response and successful search. Nome AST would like to remind travelers to check the weather and plan each trip to ensure that appropriate gear and adequate fuel are available prior to the start of any trip as well as filing a Trip Plan with family and friends.

On January 18, at approximately 2:30 a.m., Mark Henry, 21, of Gambell, was arrested for probation violation, after investigation revealed that he had consumed alcohol in violation of his probation.

On January 18, at approximately 5:30 a.m., Tanya Apatiki, 34, of Gambell, was arrested for violation of conditions of release, after the investigation revealed that she had consumed alcohol in violation of her release conditions.

On January 18, at 2:00 p.m., Savoonga Village Public Safety Officer John Peratrovich arrested Peter Waghiyi, 45, of Savoonga, with an arrest warrant for Failure to Appear. Waghiyi's original charge was Importation of Alcohol. Waghiyi was remanded to AMCC with $500.00 bail.

On January 20, at approximately 12:30 p.m., Nome AST arrested Ross Apangalook, 19, of Nome, on an outstanding Palmer Court bench warrant. Apangalook was transported and remanded at AMCC pending arraignment.

On January 20, at approximately 4:30 p.m., AST contacted Elliot Olanna and Maranda Olanna at a local airline. The investigation revealed that they were transporting improperly marked alcohol to a damp village. A Summons was issued.

On January 20, AST received a report of a criminal trespass incident. Investigation is ongoing.

On January 20, Travis Murphy, of Nome, was convicted in Nome District Court on the charge of failing to submit his musk ox trophy for destruction prior to sending it outside of Game Management Unit 22 in accordance with the conditions of his RX099 Musk Ox Hunt permit. Murphy was sentenced to one year probation, a $500 fine with $100 suspended, one year loss of hunting privileges, and forfeiture of the musk ox head to the state.

On January 20, Matthew Slingsby, of Nome, appeared in Nome District Court on a charge of violating the conditions of his RX099 Musk Ox Hunt permit. Slingsby was convicted of taking a cow during a bull only hunt. He was ordered to pay a fine of $500 with $200 suspended and serve one year on probation. The musk ox was forfeited to the state.

On January 21, at approximately 12:00 a.m., AST received a report that Fred Goodhope, Jr.

was overdue from a hunting trip and hadn't called in. A hasty team was sent, but was forced to stop at a cabin 40 miles outside Shishmaref due to a ground storm. At approximately 10:30 a.m., Fred Goodhope Jr. called and reported that he was OK and waiting out the weather.

On January 22, at approximately 3:00 a.m., Nome AST was advised of an assault outside the city limits of Nome. AST responded and investigation determined that Helen Homekingkeo, 32, of Nome, had assaulted her boyfriend by hitting him on the jaw. Homekingkeo was arrested and charged with Assault in the fourth degree involving domestic violence and one count of violation of a domestic violence protective order. Homekingkeo was transported and remanded at AMCC without incident.

On January 23, at 12:40 p.m., Nome AST received a report of a disturbance in Gambell. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Alexie Morris Jr., 34 of Gambell, for Probation Violation. Morris was remanded to AMCC.

On January 23, at 3:30 p.m., Nome AST received a report of an intoxicated person in Gambell. Victoria Campbell, 45, of Gambell, was subsequently arrested for Probation Violation. Campbell was remanded to AMCC.

On January 26, Nome AST received a report of a harassment case. It was reported that Rodger Slwooko, 23, of Gambell, was contacted by VPOs for being intoxicated. Slwooko was held in protective custody due to his level of intoxication. While being held Slwooko began causing problems by making loud noises. VPO Apatiki was checking on Slwooko when Slwooko spit in VPO Apatiki's face. Slwooko was arrested and charged with one count of Harassment in the first degree and arraigned telephonically.

Delbert Ahnahkoozuk Sahsook Eningowuk

Delbert Ahnahkoozuk Sahsook Eningowuk, known to many as “Ahtata and “Uncle Del,” died on January 21 at home in Shishmaref surrounded by family. Funeral services and burial were held in Shishmaref at the Shishmaref Lutheran Church and Cemetery on January 24. A potluck and celebration of life were held the following day at the Shishmaref Community Hall.

Delbert was born in Shishmaref to Joseph and Mary Eningowuk on February 13, 1929. He was 79 years old. On July 4, 1953, he married Nellie Okpowruk and had eight children.

He proudly served in the Alaska Territorial Guard and the United States Army and received an honorable discharge.

Delbert's main occupation was subsistence hunting and fishing. At his parents' urging, Delbert quit school to help provide for his family and help his father with his reindeer herd. He completed the sixth grade. Delbert was also a laborer, pipefitter, and roofer. He was well known for his ivory jewelry and leather “amaqing” belts. He previously served on the Shishmaref IRA Council, Shishmaref City Council and the Shishmaref Native Corporation Board.

In 2006, he was honored as Elder of the Year by the Shishmaref Native Corporation. He served on the Shishmaref Lutheran Church Council and Choir and Seward Peninsula Lutheran Church Conference Committee for years. He was also named as an Honorary Co-Chair for the SPLM Endowment Fund Campaign and proudly supported helping the church.

Ahtata will be greatly missed by many. He was very well known for his friendliness. He had many friends throughout the state, many of them he met at the arts and crafts shows at the WEIO, Fur Rondy, and AFN; and through Lutheran Church gatherings.

He enjoyed doing crossword puzzles, reading Alaskan books, jigsaw puzzles during Christmas week, snowmachining, boating, beachcombing and watching boxing, dog team races and CNN news.

The family requests that donations in Delbert's memory be made to the Seward Peninsula Lutheran Ministry Endowment Fund. Friends who would like to send condolences may mail them to: Eningowuk Family PO Box 72008 Shishmaref, Alaska 99772. Delbert is survived by his children Wayne Eningowuk, Betty Bullard, Fred Eningowuk, Katherine Eningowuk, Joseph Eningowuk, Ruby Jones and Kelly Eningowuk; sisters Katherine Barr, Flora Weyiouanna; 19 grandchildren; 7 great-grandchildren; and numerous nephews, nieces and relatives throughout the State. He was preceded in death by his wife: Nellie; his parents Joseph and Mary; his grandparents Mr. and Mrs. Cross; his siblings Reuben, Perry, Phillip and Roger Eningowuk, Sophie Nayokpuk, Eleanor Eutuk, and daughter Catherine.

STEAMY AT 30 BELOW—The warm waters of Pilgrim Hot Springs cut a swath through the snow in sub-zero weather last February. The Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska will soon seek proposals for a sale or lease of the 320-acre property north of Nome to satisfy creditors. For more, see the story below.

Nome could serve as wind power hub

By Tyler Rhodes

The story of the 18 windmills atop Banner Peak just outside of Nome is one of determination, teamwork, changed plans and thousands of man-hours over the span of a quick seven months.

Even though the turbines are happily turning and pumping power into Nome's electrical grid when the wind cooperates, Brian Jackson and Mike Costanti are far from ready to close the book on the wind farm. In fact, the duo that form Western Community Energy are hoping this tale has just begun.

"What we're celebrating here at this dedication is an incredible beginning," Jackson said at a ribbon-cutting ceremony hosted by wind farm owners Bering Straits and Sitsnuak Native corps. Jan. 29 at Old St. Joe's Hall.

That start, however, does merit some superlatives. The $5.4 million project—the largest wind farm in the state—went from getting contracts signed May 1 to producing power in December.

Timing was of the essence in terms of federal tax incentives for the project and the ability to take advantage of a crane already in town last summer for work at the Rock Creek mine. "We knew we were pushing the envelope," Jackson said. "We really hit the ground running in May just as fast as we could run."

Jackson and Western Community Energy would again like to be running with another project in the neighborhood. Banner Wind's project was designed with a hub-and-spoke system in mind, where Nome would serve as the support base for smaller-scale projects in area villages. As of yet, however, they have no takers.

Before wind farms in area villages could be a viable option, it was necessary to build one in Nome first, BSNC vice president Jerald Brown said at last Thursday's reception. Just as for travel and shipping, the idea is to have Nome serve as a hub for technical support and supplies for wind farms in more rural villages.

This idea forms the backbone of Nome's wind farm design. By placing Church seeks input before putting Pilgrim Hot Springs on the market

By Tyler Rhodes

Before it starts the process of receiving proposals on developing or selling its Pilgrim Hot Springs property, the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska is putting on a listening tour of sorts.

CBNA representatives were in Nome Monday to hold two public meetings to discuss the future of the 320-acre property 60 miles north of Nome. Tom Buzek, CBNA business administrator, and CBNA director of finance Rev. George Bowder were also here to gather area residents' input on how the property would best be used.

"From our perspective, we want to see that it's dealt with in a really good manner," Buzek told the group gathered at the afternoon meeting Monday in City Hall.

Buzek plans to conduct the same style of meeting in Teller Saturday. There, a potluck is slated for noon with the meeting to start at 3 p.m. Another meeting is scheduled for

Feb. 17 in Fairbanks, which will be open to the public via a conference call and presentation on the Internet. A time has not yet been set for the Fairbanks meeting.

In the midst of reorganization after filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, CBNA's assets are under the microscope. The bankruptcy filing came as the church works to settle hundreds of claims against it for years of sexual abuse by clergy and lay workers.

Freed from a 99-year lease, the church regained control of the property in early December. Under the

Public distrust registers with NSEDC board

By Laurie McNicholas

Siu Alaska Corp., a new, wholly owned for-profit subsidiary of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., received more public discussion near the end of an NSEDC board meeting Jan. 29 in Nome than in the entire previous year in which the subsidiary was formed mostly in secrecy.

Board members indicated that (1) they are encountering doubt and suspicion among their constituents, and (2) they have reservations about Siu Alaska Corp. and need to know more about it.

Through consultation with legal counsel in 2007, NSEDC found that some of its investments are not consistent with the company's nonprofit status, so the board of directors approved creation of an investment subsidiary to handle them. NSEDC then developed Siu Alaska Corp. without public input and without ensuring that all members of the NSEDC board fully understood all aspects of the investment subsidiary.

Currently NSEDC is transferring assets worth tens of millions of dollars to Siu. They include NSEDC's full interests in Glacier Fish Co., valued at more than $30 million according to a 2008 financial report presented to the NSEDC board last week. Also being transferred are three fishing vessels, the Aleutian No. 1 and its valuable Individual Fishing Quota for crab, the Glacier Bay and the Pacific Star. In addition, NSEDC has capitalized Siu with $6 million in cash to provide start-up funds, operating cash and a financing base, states an NSEDC press release issued last month. The purpose of Siu is to earn profits and return dividends to NSEDC for its nonprofit activities. The transfer of assets is a tax strategy, not a divestment of resources, according to the press release.

However, some residents of communities represented by NSEDC in the Western Alaska Community Development Program have grown increasingly uneasy about the transfer of a large percentage of NSEDC's assets to a new investment subsidiary about which they know little.

Some have brought their concerns to individual board members such as Joe Garnie of Teller. During the full NSEDC board meeting Jan. 29, Garnie said that he asks questions about Siu at board meetings, but it's hard for him to remember and relay the answers to others who ask him questions about the subsidiary. "I get stumped," he said. He suggested that the company prepare printed information about Siu for public distribution.

Transparency needed for Siu

"It's a transparency issue," Garnie noted. "Every aspect of the corporation should be made known to our public. I don't blame people for

Dear Editor,

There is no way gold mines that contain mercury in the ore can get the emissions down to the level the EPA requires in coal-fired power plants. Today the control of mercury emissions is all voluntary in the mining industry. This summer the EPA will start the rule-making process that could lead to government controls on air mercury emissions at mines. No mercury was in the ore at Rock Creek, but the proposed Donlin Creek Mine near the Kuskokwim River is loaded with mercury. It contains 60 times the mercury that is in the average coal used in power plants today in the US. It would be a real crime if Barrick Gold and NovaGold would add to the mercury contamination of our fish and game in Alaska.

Dear Editor,

The Nugget last week contained a story about a meeting I attended on January 22 in Nome about the high rates of salmon bycatch and waste in the Bering Sea trawl industry.

The salmon bycatch issue is important to Norton Sound residents for three reasons.

First, local people depend on salmon for food and catching and processing salmon are vital components of our cultures and economy.

Second, some people still fish commercially for salmon and use the income derived from salmon fishing to support their families. Although the value of Norton Sound commercial salmon harvests has been drastically reduced in recent years, commercial fishing could again become a significant contributor to our cash economy in the future if our fish stocks were restored. The Rock Creek mine closure should serve as a bleak reminder that we need to diversify our economy.

Finally, as owners of a Seattle based factory trawler company, Glacier Fish Company, we are part of the problem. Our vessels catch, kill and waste salmon along with the rest of them and as business owners, our company has to oppose efforts to reduce bycatch in order to preserve the profitability of our business. I was very disappointed to find that because of this conflict of interest, Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation has no policy on salmon bycatch.

At the meeting, I told the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council and the National Marine Fisheries service that none of the proposed options for reducing salmon bycatch would help us. The most conservative cap on bycatch being discussed is about 30,000 king salmon. A cap on chum salmon bycatch is not even on the table. Our stocks are so weak and the scientific data so inadequate that any cap is too high. Our local stocks cannot recover with the combined high seas interception of the trawlers and False Pass.

Everybody seems to have forgotten about False Pass. We lost that battle like I fear we will lose this one. False Pass fishermen continue to intercept our salmon without limitation.

I believe the only answer, if we want to restore local salmon harvesting opportunities, is enhancement using our hatchery on the Nome River. During the past five years, we have proven that this hatchery can produce salmon returns. It has never operated at full capacity and sits empty now for lack of funding. It appears that we will not be able to operate next summer as well. For reasons they are not willing to share with us, NSEDC is refusing to fund our operations.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation spokesperson and Glacier Fish Company president John Bundy told the NPFMC and NMFS that NSEDC spent more than $800,000 on salmon enhancement projects in 2007. NSEDC reported to the IRS that it spent $889,231 on salmon rehabilitation and enhancement in 2007 in order to justify its tax exempt status. NSEDC has been reporting similar large expenditures to the IRS for many years.

Salmon rehabilitation and enhancement projects require permits issued by ADFG. These permits are public records. The only permits ADFG issued in 2007 were for our Nome River hatchery, a small experimental mist incubation project conducted by Charlie Lean and Salmon Lake fertilization. The combined budgets for these projects do not add up to anything close to $800,000. I have written to NSEDC and asked them at their quarterly board meetings to explain this obvious discrepancy and they refuse.

My point is that if we really had invested such large sums of money in salmon enhancement, we would be seeing much larger numbers of fish in our rivers than we are seeing, and everyone would have full fish racks and freezers. Why is that not happening if NSEDC is telling the truth?

I have asked NSEDC president Dan Harrelson and our local board member Don Stiles to come clean on what NSEDC has been doing with our CDQ program money and what they intend to do about salmon enhancement. So far I have gotten nothing but a stonewall.

At their quarterly board meeting here in Nome last week, NSEDC told us about a column they were going to write in this paper. I suggest the topic of their first article should be their plans for Norton Sound salmon enhancement.

We Can't Afford Ignorance

Americans are faced with figuring a way out of the massive economic failure we are in. Our financial system is broken and we have not turned the corner to recovery. We can't even see the corner. We probably have not yet seen the worst of the situation, but we need to take quick and decisive action to stave off economic disaster. We are in uncharted waters and the ship of state needs to steer away from the rocks. We need guidance and a smart plan in the works.

We can't afford to waste time on partisan bickering and refining the pros and cons of tax cuts while our businesses and industries bleed to death. Our banking system needs a massive transfusion of money and the business of making loans can restore of fiscal circulation. Workers in the automobile industry, steel manufacturing, communications, sales, construction, mining, finance and transportation industries are without a job. Although Nome has seen fewer setbacks than the rest of the nation, and our needs may not be as dramatic, they are just as real. An economic stimulus package will get folks back on the job. The wheels of industry need to turn, but we are going to have to reinvent our industries. With these new industries comes the need for education. While we are trying to jump-start the economy we must not let the fire go out in our schools, colleges and universities. We need to keep our skilled labor force trained in the technology of the present and the future.

We need to understand that knowledge is power and is the way out of our economic crisis. We need to fund education as a top priority. We need smart, knowledgeable plumbers, electricians, mechanics, maintenance workers, carpenters, fishermen, salesmen, communicators, heating and refrigeration specialists, wind and energy specialists, scientists, engineers, farmers, teachers, physicians, nurses, medical technicians, accountants and transportation specialists. An educated, well-informed work force will enable us to be world leaders and address any challenge we must face. We can't afford to be ignorant.

Foster's Report

By Rep. Richard Foster

I am starting my 21st year in the House of Representatives and my 17th year on the House Finance Committee. This year there are four rural Democrats who have joined the Republican House Majority. The three new Democrats are Representative Joule who represents the Kotzebue and Barrow areas, Representative Edgmon who represents the Dillingham area and the Aleutian Islands, and Representative Herrin who represents the Bethel Region. The new Speaker of the House is Mike

Chenault from Nikiski. I have worked closely with Representative Chenault in his former position as co-chair of House Finance. I have found him to be fair, intelligent and reasonable. There are two new co-chairs of Finance; Representatives Mike Hawker (HD32) and Bill Stoltze (HD16). Both men have ample experience on the Finance committee and have proven themselves to be diligent, dedicated members with an exceptional breadth and

The first session of the 26th Alaska State Legislature convened on January 20, and I want to start by thanking you for your support and the honor of representing our district once again, especially during the excitement of our State's 50 year celebration.

I would also like to extend congratulations to our new President, Barack Obama, who brings much hope and has already energized our country. He is faced with some of the most serious economic problems any of us will see in our lifetime, and the country is relying on his wisdom to guide us through these tough times.

Congratulations also to the Suurimmaanitchuat Dancers from Barrow for performing in the inaugural parade! It was quite an honor to be selected, and we are proud of them!

As we begin this session, we are facing many issues of great import to our state and region as well. Since I as well as Representative Foster and Representative Joule are all in the majority and on Finance this session, that bodes well for our district. NPS teachers seek to replace chalkboards with technology

Board members delve into parent/community survey uses

By Laurie McNicholas

A group of teachers at Nome Public Schools (NPS) and NPS Technology Director Robin Johnson would like to assign classroom chalkboards to a museum and replace them with Promethean boards, which they believe are far more effective and efficient teaching tools for today’s visual, interactive learners—and a ton of fun to use.

Wikipedia says a Promethean board is a large interactive white-board display that connects to a computer and a projector. The projector projects the computer’s desktop onto the board’s surface, where users control the computer using a pen, finger or other device. The board usually is mounted on a wall or a floor stand.

During discussion with Nome Board of Education members at a work session Jan. 27, Johnson said she had observed a third grade teacher move coins around on a Promethean board and then ask students to vote (using a device called an “egg”—something like a computer mouse) on the amount of money displayed on the board. The teacher immediately identified two students who did not get the right answer, and reviewed the lesson with them to help them solve the problem. The students enjoyed taking the test because they thought they were playing an interactive game, she added. She said the technology reduces the time spent grading tests and disciplining students.

Several NPS teachers who recently observed the use of Promethean boards in classrooms at Colony High School in the Mat-Su Valley told the board they found that the technology engages students in learning and improves attendance. Nancy Bahnke, who teaches science to Nome-Beltz senior high school students, said she watched a chemistry teacher working with equations on a Promethean board. “You can click and go back and forth, like using arrow buttons on a computer,” she said. “Kids like it so much more than writing on a chalkboard.” She said she could record lessons on the device for use by a substitute teacher.

Johnson said each Promethean board costs about $5,000 and includes a projector, a stylus and programming. She suggested that a team of teachers be trained to use the technology for 16 hours on a weekend, and if they are still on board when they finish the training, consider ordering Promethean boards for their classrooms. In turn they would teach other faculty to use the technology, she added.

NPS Superintendent Rick Luthi told the board that the school district has technology grant funds with which to purchase some Promethean boards. Board member Barb Nickels asked about the availability of repair service for the devices. Luthi said he wants a staff person to learn how to repair them, and he would find out what repair needs to anticipate.

Parent and community survey

An NPS survey form that seeks opinions from parents of students and the community about the performance of elementary and/or high school teachers and school administrators drew criticism from the board because it states, “Forms must be signed to be considered in the evaluation.” The forms were circulated in the community with an initial due date of Jan. 31.

Albert McComas said there is no need for a person who fills out the survey form to identify oneself. “If I criticize my kid’s teacher, will the teacher retaliate against my kid?” he asked. “It can get really ugly.... For two years the school board has said, ‘Don’t put on a signature requirement,’ and it’s there.”

Luthi apologized for distributing the survey form and said he didn’t know the board had decided not to have it signed. However, he said it is right for a teacher to see everything written on a form about him or her, and he emphasized that he would add only signed comments to a teacher’s evaluation. He provided board members with an excerpt from a Department of Education and Early Development regulation on the evaluation of professional employees of school districts that includes this requirement: “The evaluation must clearly indicate that this kind of information has been used and clearly identify the source of the information” (4 AAC 19.030). Alaska Statute 14.07.020 is cited as the authority for the regulation.

Brennan suggested that NPS announce a time extension for the return of survey forms and include the information that they need not be signed. Board President Gloria Karmun suggested posting the announcement on the NPS website. Luthi concurred and said those who fill out the survey forms need to know any comments they make about a teacher will be seen by the teacher, and if the form is signed it may be considered for use in a teacher’s evaluation.

Brennan said NPS has used the survey for years in accordance with performance standards of the Alaska State Board of Education, but she questioned what, if anything, the survey results are used for. Nome-Beltz High School Principal Janeen Sullivan said the surveys are sent to the District Office.

Karmun asked Sullivan and Nome Elementary School Principal Carl White if they had ever used survey responses in the evaluations of a teacher. “No,” they both replied.

“Do you think the survey is useful?” she asked.

“For the last four years teachers have asked for information from the survey and never got it,” White said. “Are we looking at (1) general input, or (2) use in evaluations?”

“It’s a report card to the board, not for use in evaluations,” Karmun replied. Luthi distributed to board members two draft survey forms he has prepared—one for the

Battle of Books: Kindergartners lead the charge

For as long as these children have been alive, our country has been at war. So when the call for battle sounded, these kindergarten students stepped up their efforts to proudly serve their classes. It was the Battle of Books, and the competition was fierce in the Nome Elementary School Library last week.

On January 28 the kindergarten through second grade went head to head, with over 100 students on 24 teams. The second graders even had cheerleaders! Students used the football huddle to discuss the books with their teammates and often arrived at the correct title and author. "In which book are there otters and porcupines?" asked the librarian. "KUMAK'S HOUSE BY MICHAEL BANIA" yelled 18 smart children from Mrs. Keller's class. And they were right! Mrs. Rand's sixth grade class performed the duties of scribes, timers and scorekeepers. The Battle of Books is truly a team effort, with several children working together to score points.

Over 70 students participated in Battle of Books on January 14. The 3rd/4th Grade Battle raged into a four-way tie, with Ms. Bourdon's team pulling ahead in the end. Only 16 points separated the top eight teams. Students read from a list of 14 books and had to answer several questions from the books on the list. Students worked on teams of four to eight in an effort to identify the correct author and title for each question. Anvil City Science Academy won the 5th/6th Grade battle after an intense tiebreaker round.

Representing Nome Public Schools in the statewide battles will be Cjache Kang, Katie Kelso, Hannah Alowa, Joshua Bourdon, Tate Coler, Caitlyn Sherman-Luce, Katy Tomter and Ian Booth. From Nome-Beltz, students in the state competition include: Dawn Wehde, Cecilia Wehde, Bruce Landry, Andrea Irrigoo, Victor Spivey, Anvil Boeckmann, Brandon Wehde, Beth Herzner, Vanessa Tahbone, Mark Steiger, Jeffrey Rose, and Joel Jorgensen. These battles will take place late in February via teleconference.

FY10 budget and calendar

Luthi said the projected student enrollment of 659 students for FY 2010 would require a budget reduction of $450,000. He plans to present a draft budget to the board March 10 for discussion at their meeting March 24.

Luthi reviewed the newly developed NPS calendar for the 2009-2010 school year with the board. Three in-service days and two work days are scheduled prior to the first day of school on Aug. 25, and school will end before Memorial Day in 2010. Highlights include the addition of a work day on Jan. 18, Martin Luther King Day, and an unpaid vacation day Feb. 15 to provide for a three-day weekend in association with Presidents' Day.

Joint board meeting

Luthi presented board members with a list of topics for discussion at their joint evening meeting with the Bering Strait School District board Feb. 3 in Teller. The list includes joint purchases such as paper, fuel and building materials; joint legislative and regional priorities; the Northwest Alaska Career and Technical Education Center; sharing services related to special education and technology and sharing staff; the use of warehouse space and the joint use of office and educational space; cooperative educational offerings; applications for grants; and joint in-service sessions.

Modern-day robbers turn to text messaging

Recent 'smishing' scam targets Credit Union 1 account holders

By Tyler Rhodes

No longer content to target victims by phone, e-mail or fax, scammers have now taken aim at the unsuspecting through text messages on cellular phones.

Dubbed "smishing," the text message scam attempts to get Credit Union 1 customers in Nome and throughout Alaska to reveal their account information. According to the Alaska State Troopers, the message falsely informs the recipient that their account has been suspended. The mobile phone owner is then directed to call a 1-870 phone number or go online to 8705874360@cu1.org so the problem can be resolved. Troopers and bank officials stress that people should not respond to the messages.

The term "smishing" is derived from a combination of "phishing" and "SMS," which is short for "short message service."

John Baker, manager of Nome's

Credit Union 1 branch, knows of at least one customer who was baited by the scam. "We had one member who came in yesterday," Baker said

ing to the person."

Baker said that while the text messages are arriving on Nome area phones, the scammers do not know

"They did the smart thing and came directly to us to say 'What is this?' instead of directly responding to the person."

— John Baker, Credit Union 1

Jan. 29. "They did the smart thing and came directly to us to say 'What is this?' instead of directly respond-for sure if those receiving the message are, in fact, Credit Union 1 customers. "They're just taking a chance that you have an account with us when they send out the text," Baker said. "It's just like tossing a dart at a dart board."

The bottom line is any unsolicited attempt to get personal information—whether it be by text message, e-mail, phone call or fax—should be considered fraudulent, Troopers said. They advise people to contact their bank directly if they receive a suspicious communication. Troopers say to never call the number provided in the suspect message or click on Internet hyperlinks.

Baker said the text message scam is the third attempt to pry personal information out of Credit Union 1 customers since the start of January. The other two waves of fraud attacks were sent by e-mail, Baker said.

In the wake of the scams, Credit Union 1 recommends customers do the following:

- Familiarize themselves with Credit Union 1 communications.

- Know the bank will never solicit personal/private information via e-mail or text message.

- Be aware that communication regarding accounts is sent via U.S. Mail in an official Credit Union 1 envelope.

- If an unknown employee calls, customers have the right to hangup. Call Credit Union 1 at 1-800-478-2222 and ask to be transferred to that employee.

- If customers are ever unsure of the validity of a Credit Union 1 communication, the credit union asks them to trust their gut and contact the Credit Union immediately.

The above recommendations can serve as guidelines to follow for any communication purporting to be from a bank or financial institution.

For more information on Credit Union 1, its website is www.cu1.org. More information on on-line scams can be found at www.ftc.gov.

Airport Pizza may be delivered to living rooms nationwide

Production company checks out Nome establishment for realty TV series

By Tyler Rhodes

People in Nome already know that watching each other can be one of the more interesting forms of local entertainment.

If one Hollywood production company has its way, the rest of the nation may get the chance to join in on the fun.

Maryn Peters of Authentic Entertainment was in Nome for several days last week gathering footage that could be shopped out to television networks for a potential reality show. The proposed show would be based around Nome restaurant and hang-out, Airport Pizza. "The show would be based on the restaurant and hopefully get into other stories through the restaurant," she said.

Peters said one of the members of the development team at the production company had heard about the restaurant through a news story. Airport Pizza has received a fair amount of ink and news coverage for delivering pizzas through local air carriers to area villages.

Authentic initially contacted Matt Tomter at Airport Pizza to gauge his interest. When he said yes, the company sent a camera to the restaurant, asking them to film the staff working in the restaurant. Peters received the footage and assembled it to present to her bosses. They liked what they saw, and before long Peters found herself on the way to Nome with a camera. "I wanted to go to Alaska," she said as she took a break from filming Friday evening. "I didn't want to go when it was 10 below, but I wanted to go."

Peters got more than she bargained for; it was 31 below on her final day in town.

Tomter pulled out all the stops to bring patrons to the restaurant to provide for footage. Airport Pizza was the scene of a beer tasting Friday night, showcasing the flavors on tap from Kasiks Brewing. On Saturday, the restaurant played host to a benefit concert for the Nome Food Bank. Several of Nome's musicians took the stage for a packed house. To provide even more color for the camera, Tomter had Nome's world-famous "Santa" Paul Kudla—in full Kris Kringle garb—push a shopping cart full of frozen turkeys through the crowded dining room. The turkeys were later put up for bid for the honor of naming them as they went to the food bank.

Whether or not Peters or others from Authentic Entertainment will be back to film for an actual TV show remains to be seen. Upon returning to Los Angeles, Peters will condense and edit the footage she captured here to present to her bosses. If they like what they see, they could then shop the potential show to a network. "It's a crap shoot," Peters said. "It comes down to if a network is looking for something like this."

The production company has succeeded with other shows, such as "Ace of Cakes," which is based on an eccentric cake designer and airs on the Food Network. Whether "As Airport Pizza Turns" would follow, well, Nomeites will just have to stay tuned.

Energy plan to get hearing in Nome

House members will host meetings in Nome, Kotzebue

The state House Special Committee on Energy will be taking its show on the road this weekend.

In an effort to hear what area residents have to say about a state energy plan, the committee will host meetings in Nome and Kotzebue this weekend.

The committee will be in Nome on Sunday, Feb. 8, at Old St. Joe's Hall from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., and in Kotzebue on Saturday, Feb. 7, from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. at the Northwest Arctic Borough Assembly Chambers.

"Alaskans in rural areas view energy differently than Alaskans in urban areas," said Energy Committee Co-chair Bryce Edgmon, D-Dillingham, in a press release. "If the committee is going to help build the framework for a statewide energy plan, we need to talk to people who struggle to keep the lights and heat on at home."

Edgmon, Co-chair Rep. Charisse Millett, R-Anchorage, and Rep. Reggie Joule, D-Kotzebue, will all attend the hearings.

"Our job will be to be listen and learn," Millett said in a press release. "We will bring back to Juneau what we hear and see on this trip, and use it to formulate a more viable plan for renewable energy in rural Alaska."

The committee plans to travel to Dillingham and Bethel later this month.

Clergy sex abuse victims file motion to sue Vatican

By Diana Haecker

Last week, 285 Alaskan sex abuse claimants filed a motion in the Anchorage bankruptcy court to take their claims to the top and sue the Vatican.

Los Angeles lawyer James Stang, attorney for the creditors' committee, told The Nome Nugget, "We filed a motion asking the court to force the Fairbanks Diocese to sue the Vatican, and if they didn't, that we would sue."

The Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska declared bankruptcy in February 2008 as a slew of sexual abuse claims were filed against clergy and lay workers employed by the Fairbanks Diocese in a time span between the 1960s and 1980s. The Dec. 2, 2008 deadline on claims produced a total of 285 claimants, who say they were abused as children at the hands of Catholic clergy.

Stang said that the Vatican had the duty to protect the Diocese from sexual abuse claims and didn't as an internal Church trial manual called Crimen Sollicitationis (Latin, crime of soliciting) mandated to keep sexual abuse a secret.

While the document outlines procedures of sexual abuse trials within the Church hierarchy, it also imposed absolute secrecy on the conduct of the trial. An oath of secrecy was to be taken not only by the members of the tribunal but also by the person or persons denouncing the priest, by the witnesses and by the accused priest himself.

During statute of limitation hearings in the cases of Jane Doe 2 and Jane Doe 3 against former Nome priest James Poole, the judge heard testimony to the same effect that an internal Church manual existed to keep sexual abuse claims involving clergy secret from anybody outside the church hierarchy, including law enforcement officers. The mandate threatened that anybody breaking the secrecy would be punished by excommunication.

Stang said this created an environment to increase instances of sexual abuse instead of averting them.

Holding the very top of the Catholic Roman Church hierarchy responsible for cover-ups of the alleged sexual abuse is a new development, which started with a court ruling in November 2008. According to the Catholic News, a U.S. federal appeals court ruled a sex abuse case brought by three Kentucky men could proceed because exceptions in the law allow the Vatican to be held liable for the actions of church employees acting within the scope of their employment in the United States. "When we saw the Kentucky ruling, our feeling was that we should give it a try," Stang said.

While Stang says it's probably unreasonable to think that Rome will open the pocketbook and start writing checks, "it puts pressure on Rome to address what's going on in Dioceses in the United States and in Fairbanks, in particular," Stang said.

Ronnie Rosenberg with CBNA said that the Fairbanks Diocese has never seen the Crimen Sollicitationis. "We don't find it in our archives," Rosenberg said. She added that suing the Vatican in a U.S. civil action holds special drawbacks as it is a sovereign city-state and protected by diplomatic immunity. "Our lawyers are reviewing the motion right now and then determine on the course of action," Rosenberg said. "In theory, if it goes forward, we don't hold much hope for the claimants to see a resolution soon as things get so much more complicated."

bankruptcy proceedings, CBNA now needs to find a way to maximize the cash benefit of the property. The devil is in the details, however, in just how that will be accomplished.

Indeed, Buzek and Bowder said, with so many creditors—and, thus, lawyers—involved in the process, ironing out a plan that will appease the majority involved in the process could take some time. "We don't want to kid people into thinking we could sit people down at the table and be marching down the road in a couple of weeks," Bowder said.

Ultimately the bankruptcy court judge will have to approve the plan of how Pilgrim and the church's other assets are handled. "Our hands are tied in ways," Buzek said.

Bowder outlined a rough timeline in which CBNA would make a motion in court at the end of the month asking that it be allowed to field proposals regarding the property. Those proposals could involve a sale or lease of all or part of the 320 acres, among other options.

The proposals—all sealed—would be held by a third party until the end of April. Bowder said they would then be evaluated by a team of professionals to see what would best meet the needs of the reorganization and the church. "We have to realize the best value of the property but still keep the church viable to continue the mission," Bowder said. "It's a balancing act."

Saying that the proposals may have to be creative to achieve that balance, Bowder and Buzek hit on several potential uses for the property, such as agriculture, tourism, geothermal development, the use of its trees for biomass energy, the resurrection of historical buildings and even aquaculture.

Bowder said a plan of action will need to come together by the end of the summer and then be implemented by the end of the year. "By the end of this year we're going to be living a plan instead of still trying to write one," Bowder said. "We'll be living a plan guided by God's hand."

While the Pilgrim property is the elephant in the room, other church property and assets will be included in the plan, including Nome radio station KNOM. "Pilgrim is just one of the parcels that the court is eyeing," Bowder said.

It is the Pilgrim property, however, that will likely draw the most reaction from area residents, as evidenced by comments offered at the

Monday afternoon meeting.

Though privately owned by the church, area residents have freely used the area for decades.

Nome Mayor Denise Michels voiced concerns over continued access to the property for recreation and subsistence purposes. "We hope that whatever happens has minimal impact because it is something we all treasure," Michels said. "We will be keeping track of this."

Nome resident John Handeland also spoke on Nome's relationship with the hot springs. "Anything that does go on up there, there's a whole bunch of folks who maybe don't have a legal right, but certainly have a tie to the property," Handeland told Buzek and Bowder. "Not a lot of people are fully familiar with the cemetery out there in the woods. There are friends and family that are interred out there—some since the mission days."

Handeland offered the suggestion of utilizing the area as a spiritual healing site—an apparent reference to the abuse suffered by the claimants at the hands of clergy. "Money can't solve all evils and right all wrongs," he said.

Buzek and Bowder emphasized that comments and suggestions from the public in the area could have weight with the bankruptcy judge. "The more input we can get from the local community about where their heart strings are with the property [the better]," Buzek said. "In my heart I feel the local input will at least be heard. If the local opinion is not out there, it's perceived that they just don't care."

The gentlemen suggested that residents wishing to comment write to the bishop (see contact information at the bottom of this page).

During Monday's meeting, Nome resident Carl Emmons asked if the property will simply be sold to the highest bidder. The two representatives from CBNA were unable to provide an exact answer to his question, saying several options are possible.

It is currently unknown if the source of the hot springs is located on the 320 acres. That knowledge is an important piece of the puzzle for a prospective buyer, especially if plans for geothermal energy development are included.

Buzek said CBNA and the University of Alaska Fairbanks are seeking a state grant to conduct research on the site to determine the location of the source. Even if the grants are approved and the work is conducted, Bowder said the research would not likely be completed until the fall, several months after the proposals for the property have been received.

The discussion of the hot springs' source perked the attention of Matt Ganley of Bering Straits Native Corp.'s Land and Resource division. Ganley, participating by conference call, said Bering Straits would be interested in any research work since the regional Native corporation owns much of the subsurface rights in the acreage surrounding the property. Mary's Igloo Native Corp. also has land abutting the property where it controls subsurface development rights.

The source could very well be on either Native corporation's property. "Bering Straits Native Corp. and Mary's Igloo would like to be in the loop," Ganley said.

Buzek responded that the UAF researchers would like to look at a broader area than just the Pilgrim property, and thought contact had been made between the university and adjoining landowners. Ganley said agreements would have to be worked on soon to allow researchers to work on Native corporation lands.

pinning me on the spot. Every aspect should be publicized in written form.”

Dan Harrelson of White Mountain, NSEDC’s board chairman and president, told Garnie his points are valid and important. “We have taken some steps,” Harrelson said. “We recently sent out to the communities a lot of answers to the questions you are answering.” He added that the information should have been sent out six months ago. (The only written information about Siu that the City of Nome has received and publicly distributed is the same information The Nome Nugget received in a January press release from NSEDC, and it is summarized in the third paragraph of this article.)

Harrelson said it will be important to include information about Siu in NSEDC’s outreach program for member communities to begin this month and extend to April.

“Fine and dandy,” replied Garnie. “But we need to put it out in writing.... We are not a private corporation; it belongs to everybody [in the Bering Strait region.]”

Don Stiles, Nome’s representative on the NSEDC board, asked the company’s CEO Janis Ivanoff if she plans to prepare a pamphlet about Siu. Stiles was elected board chair and president of Siu Alaska Corp. at the subsidiary’s first board meeting last October. (The first Siu board meeting was held in Anchorage, it was not advertised, and apparently it was not a public meeting.)

Ivanoff said a front page story about Siu appears in an NSEDC newsletter that is en route to post office boxes in the region. She added that a question-and-answer pamphlet about Siu will be prepared and distributed by mail. Harrelson, who also serves on the Siu board, indicated he is encountering public mistrust. He said some people tell him they’ve heard he got a check for $1 million from Siu. He acknowledged that NSEDC needs to do a better job of disseminating information about Siu.

It’s questionable whether NSEDC’s belated public information efforts will dissipate public mistrust of the Siu Alaska Corp. Outside the meeting, a group of NSEDC’s constituents noted that Siu is now a done deal and they were excluded from its formative process. They asked why they should entrust a big chunk of their company’s assets to an investment corporation that was put together in secret by a few people, noting that the assets took 16 years to build up.

Does the NSEDC board understand Siu?

NSEDC board member Elvina Naranjo of Koyuk asked for a show of hands among other board members who do not understand a certain aspect of Siu Alaska Corp. Part of her question was inaudible to the Nugget’s reporter. No board member raised a hand. However, Mary Menadelook of Little Diomedé said she does not understand, and Garnie said his understanding is cloudy. Harrelson then directed staff to work with these two board members.

“We know the intent of the program, but we have reservations about it, and we need to know more,” declared Dean Peterson, who represents Golovin on the NSEDC board.

During a subsequent public comments session, Nome resident Tim Smith said it is interesting that no board member raised a hand in response to Naranjo’s question. He asked the board for a show of hands in response to the following questions.

“How many board members have read the Siu Corp. Articles of Incorporation?” About three quarters of board members raised their hands.

“How many board members have read the Siu bylaws?” Fewer hands were raised than in response to the first question.

“How many board members have read any other corporate documents for Siu Corp.?” No hands went up.

“How many board members know the value of assets transferred to Siu Corp.?” Only Harrelson raised his hand.

The NSEDC board bracketed its Jan. 29 meeting agenda with public comment sessions near the beginning and end of the meeting, doubling the opportunity for public input compared to previous meetings.

Who’s on the Siu board?

Three NSEDC-affiliated individuals (Stiles, Harrelson and Harvey Sookiayak of Shaktoolik) serve on the Siu Alaska Corp. board with four members from outside the corporation (John Baker, Ike Towarak, Neal Foster and John Eckels). No profiles of any Siu board members have been made public to indicate what skills, applicable background and experience they may bring to decision-making for the multi-million dollar investment subsidiary.

NSEDC did not advertise for non-affiliated Siu board members. In response to prodding questions from Smith, Harrelson said NSEDC board members came up with names of prospective Siu directors and invited them to submit letters of interest.

NSEDC staff reportedly polled board members individually by phone last spring to elect the three NSEDC-affiliated directors of Siu. It is not known why the election wasn’t conducted during a regular board meeting. Initially Ivanoff was elected to the Siu board, but she withdrew at an NSEDC board meeting held last July in Nome, and Sookiayak was elected to replace her.

At the July board meeting, the initial terms of service of NSEDC-affiliated members of the Siu board were announced. The initial terms of service are staggered in three classes of board seats—Class A (three years), B (two years) and C (one year). It was revealed that Stiles holds a three-year seat on the Siu board. NSEDC board member Wilfred Katchek of Stebbins asked why Stiles holds a three-year seat on the Siu board. He received no answer.

During the July meeting Ivanoff gave board members a confidential written progress report on formation of Siu that included proposed bylaws for the subsidiary. The NSEDC board approved Siu’s bylaws as presented at the July meeting. The bylaws were not made public until last month.

Following is a noteworthy provision in the Siu bylaws: “Once elected to the Corporation’s board, an NSEDC director may complete his or her term as a director of the Corporation notwithstanding any failure to be re-elected as a NSEDC board member during their term on this Corporation’s Board of Directors” (Article IV, Section 2). Stiles’ NSEDC board seat is up for election in October 2009, but if he chooses not to run for re-election or if he runs and is defeated, under Siu bylaws he may continue to serve out his three-year term on the Siu board. The NSEDC board seats held by Harrelson and Sookiayak are not up for election until October 2010, and by that time their terms as Siu board members will have expired.

Rumors abound that Siu board members receive salaries, and that Stiles as Siu president may have received a higher salary than other Siu board members, but no such information has been made public. At last week’s NSEDC board meeting Stiles announced that Eckles is Siu’s interim CEO. Initially NSEDC recruited in-house for the position and selected Simon Kinneen to fill it, but he declined the offer. Kinneen is a biologist who has served for a year as NSEDC’s CDQ harvest manager. Previously he directed the company’s Fisheries Research and Development Program. At last week’s meeting, Harrelson said he did not want NSEDC to lose Kinneen to Siu, so in consultation with Ivanoff, Kinneen has been promoted to chief operating officer of the parent corporation.

Why the stock shares for Siu?

NSEDC may wish to explain the purpose and use of Siu’s 100,000 shares of voting stock in a question-and-answer pamphlet about Siu. Siu is wholly owned—100 percent—by NSEDC. Article IV of Siu Alaska’s articles of incorporation states, “The corporation shall have a single class of stock consisting of 100,000 shares of common voting stock having no par value per share.”

Article III, Section 1 of Siu’s bylaws states, “The annual meeting of the shareholder shall be held on the first Friday of November, each and every year, beginning in 2009, for the purpose of electing directors and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the meeting.” In response to a question from the Nugget last August, Bob Walsh, who was then NSEDC’s CEO, said NSEDC will be the shareholder of Siu Alaska Corp.

Siu splits ship’s ownership

During last week’s NSEDC board meeting, Stiles announced plans for Siu to reduce its ownership interest in the F/V Aleutian No. 1 from 100 percent to 50 percent by selling 25 percent interest to the vessel’s captains, Rick Alvarez and Rip Carlton, and donating 12.5 percent interest in the ship to the Bering Sea Women’s Group in Nome. Stiles said the Norton Sound Health Corp. CAMP program had declined Siu’s offer to donate 12.5 percent ownership of the vessel to the entity, so the Siu board will decide how to divest the corporation of that 12.5 percent of its ownership in the vessel. The ship primarily harvests brown (golden) crab in Aleutian Islands waters.

Dick Tremaine, NSEDC’s assets manager, said Siu’s divestiture of 50 percent ownership in the Aleutian No. 1 will protect NSEDC’s tax-exempt status as a nonprofit corporation. Donating up to 25 percent ownership of the vessel to other nonprofit entities may result in a tax deduction for the corporation, he added. In its pamphlet about Siu, NSEDC may wish to include a detailed explanation of the complex issues involved in Siu’s decision to divest itself of 50 percent of its ownership interest in the vessel.

Education Foundation

Concern about development of the new NSEDC Education Foundation also surfaced among board members at last week’s meeting. The NSEDC board authorized formation of the foundation at a special meeting Aug. 29, 2008 in Anchorage. Walsh had promised to inform the Nugget of any significant action taken at that meeting, but he did not do so.

During a quarterly meeting last November in Nome, the board adopted a resolution for NSEDC to contribute $15 million, including some or all of the NSEDC funds held in a Key Bank account for education purposes, to the foundation after the IRS recognizes the foundation’s tax-exempt status. The action also contributed $250,000 in NSEDC funds to the foundation to hold an organizational meeting, hire an executive director and submit Form 1023 to the IRS to obtain recognition of tax-exempt status. The foundation’s draft articles of incorporation and bylaws also were approved.

The resolution included appointment of the following individuals to the foundation’s initial board of directors to serve staggered terms. NSEDC board members Victor Joe of St. Michael and Wilfred Katchek of Stebbins each will serve three-year terms; Laura Degnan Lawrence of Nome and Eric Morris of White Mountain each will serve two-year terms; and Janice Dickens of Unalakleet, one year.

NSEDC did not advertise to recruit candidates for non-NSEDC-affiliated seats on the foundation board. Instead, NSEDC invited select individuals to submit letters of interest in serving on the foundation board. No information about the non-NSEDC-affiliated board members other than their names has been disseminated to the public.

Eric Morris is the father of Katie Peterson, NSEDC’s community development coordinator in White Mountain. Peterson is listed as contact person for information about the foundation in a memorandum from Harrelson to all NSEDC municipalities, tribes and Native corporations dated Dec. 13, 2008.

The foundation directors held their first organizational meeting with NSEDC staff and the corporation’s attorney Margaret Russell in late afternoon Jan. 28 at the Bering Straits Native Corp. boardroom. The meeting was not advertised, but Garnie and Smith each heard that it was scheduled and attended it. The foundation’s directors reportedly elected Victor Joe as board chairman and Wilfred Katchek as vice chairman.

Meeting disorganized

The following day during a full board meeting, Garnie described the foundation’s organizational meeting as ill-prepared, disorganized and unstructured. He suggested freezing operation of the foundation to forestall its further actions.

Janis Ivanoff told Garnie he is right, and she apologized to him as a staff member. “We should have reviewed issues with the board once more,” she said. However, she questioned whether development of the foundation should be halted. She said the intent is solid, and it’s great to provide for the education of your children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. “An organizational meeting is for the purpose of getting organized,” she added.

“The problem is not with the board members,” stated Harrelson. He explained that Russell had done initial work on the foundation, but someone else in her firm had filled in for her during her absence. “The problems were found by the board themselves,” he added.

Russell said originally directors were to serve two-years terms, but that was changed and her associate forgot to make the change while revising the foundation’s bylaws. In regard to management, she said the foundation’s board has a different view of compensation for the president. Usually the presidency of a nonprofit entity is a volunteer position, but the foundation’s board is not comfortable with that, so their concern will be taken back to the board for consideration, she said. The directors want a second organizational meeting, and this is a good process toward receiving non-profit status from the IRS, she added.

Stiles said the intent of the foundation is to protect the education fund from liability, from future board action and from being leveraged. He said he wants scholarships to be available in perpetuity. However, he did not explain how the foundation would ensure such safeguards.

Noting that Jerry Ivanoff has run NSEDC’s Education, Employment and Training (EET) program for 16 years, Garnie said he has been listening to his advice and fears. “I feel we did not fully consider [the foundation],” he stated. “I want to see if it is really necessary and how much it will cost. I’d like to see Jerry in charge of this. I trust his advice. He’s done a good job over the years. I’d like his advice on the progress of it.”

Jerry Ivanoff said he wants to be sure the EET post office box address in Unalakleet is maintained because he is processing 115 applications and making awards. Adequate lead time is needed for any address change, he noted, and the foundation will take a while to put in place.

Katie Peterson said NSEDC’s $15 million contribution to the foundation will not be transferred for some time, noting that the foundation must first hire a CEO and receive tax-exempt status from the IRS. “I agree it’s an alarmingly rocky process,” she added. “The bylaws need to come back to the NSEDC board before we can move forward with the foundation.”

Whose baby is it?

Efforts to develop an education foundation were launched Nov. 1, 2007 when the NSEDC board approved a motion to create a $10.6 million foundation for scholarships and vocational training by donating all moneys in the corporation’s endowment fund to the foundation. Paul Johnson of Unalakleet made the motion and Stiles seconded it.

Johnson said he made the motion because he was leaving the board and wanted to preserve NSEDC’s education fund. Stiles said the corporation should continue to contribute funds to the foundation until its coffers hold $15 million.

Eugene Asicksik, who was then NSEDC’s CEO, reminded the board that the corporation’s original Community Development Plan had established an education endowment and contributed NSEDC funds to it until the endowment fund reached $5 million. Profits from endowment fund investments had been reinvested in the endowment fund, and the corporation had not contributed to the fund for the past five years, he added. In other words, NSEDC’s EET program had been operating for the preceding five years—distributing scholarships and providing vocational training—with proceeds from the existing education endowment fund.

Nome to soon hear the howl of the Iron Dogs

By Tyler Rhodes

A month before racers of the four-legged variety march down Front Street in the Iditarod, a horde of two-stroke iron dogs will come roaring into Nome.

Nearly 100 riders will be racing toward Nome come Feb. 8 as the 2009 Tesoro Iron Dog snow-machine race takes off. Since 1984, Nome has heard the roar of the machines coming through town, serving initially as the finish line and now the half-way mark for the pro class racers. The recreational trail class still finishes in Nome.

The nearly 2,000-mile race starts in Big Lake and heads north through the Alaska Range and into the Interior. Racers take a left at Ruby and race west for the Seward Peninsula. The race takes a brief break in Nome before making a U-turn to retrace its route to Ruby, where it will continue east to the finish line in Fairbanks.

The race route is about as wild and woolly as they come, covering mountainous terrain, frozen tundra, and river and sea ice. Racers face the potential of extreme cold, white-out conditions, and too little or too much snow. And all of this is offered up in one of the more remote reaches of a state known for its rugged terrain.

Racers this year are expected to arrive in Nome Feb. 10 with the annual Nome Halfway Banquet slated for 7 p.m. at the Mini Convention Center Feb. 11.

For three racers, the Nome halfway point will be a short-lived homecoming. Veteran racer Jim "Tre" West III and rookies Mike Morgan and Cliff Johnson have all entered the pro class for this year's race. All are racing with partners who live outside of Nome. West is teamed with Peter Reigh Sr., a rookie racer from Palmer. Morgan is racing with Tyler Huntington of Galena, a veteran racer. Johnson is riding with Micah Huss of Anchorage, who, like Johnson, will be racing his first Iron Dog.

Morgan's debut in the race comes in the same year that his late grandfather, Barrow Morgan, was inducted into the Iron Dog Hall of Fame Jan. 31. The elder Morgan started the snowmachine shop, Morgan's Sales and Service, in Nome.

This year's race could have a few more eyes on it than normal thanks to one racer. Alaska's "First Dude" Todd Palin is back at it again, looking for a fifth win. Welcomed or not, Palin was caught in the spotlight of the national media as his wife—and Alaska's governor—Sarah Palin ran in a high-pressure race, herself. Gov. Palin's unsuccessful bid for vice president led to media interest in Todd and his activities. The result for the Iron Dog has been coverage in the Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, Sports Illustrated and mentions in several other national and international media outlets.

"Everything's been a little more exciting after the Palins were recognized nationwide," said Josie Stiles, a Nome resident who is on the Iron Dog's board of directors. "It gives us a little more media coverage."

Stiles relayed reports of improving course conditions after a thaw in mid-January. "From what I understand is that it's better now," she said.

Finishers in this year's pro-class race will cross the line in Fairbanks, as in years past. Different this year, however, will be just where in the Golden Heart City that line is located. Stiles said the finish will be moved to downtown Fairbanks from Pikes Landing, where it was previously staged. Stiles said the finishers banquet will also be moved from that locale to the Carlson Center.

Stiles said the departure from Pike's Landing comes as the race grows. "Hopefully that will draw more to the finish," she said of the move to downtown. Stiles also said there wasn't enough room at Pike's for the finishers banquet.

Nomeites will be able to attend a banquet here in town on Feb. 11. Attendees are asked to bring a side dish, but otherwise there is no entry cost for the event. The banquet celebrates the finish for the trail class racers and gives locals the chance to meet all the racers. Among this year's trail class racers are a couple from Iceland and a team of women from Alaska. Stiles said it is not the first time to have a female team in the race, but it has been a few years.

As in past years, the City of Nome is supplying space in its garage for the snowmachine impound.

Stiles said the event is a boon for Nome, both in breaking up the doldrums of winter and in terms of economics. "It gives Nome a good shot in the arm, as far as the economy," Stiles said. "It brings in people."

The pro class is scheduled to blast off the line in Big Lake Feb. 8. The trail class, which travels just to Nome, hits the trail two days earlier.

Boys blank Dillingham at home

The Nome boys basketball team showed no sign of slowing its winning ways last weekend as it easily dispatched Dillingham in games Friday and Saturday night at home.

Blitzed by a barrage of 11 three-pointers, strong defense, a deep bench and even an alley-oop slam dunk, the Wolverines fell 87-44 against the seemingly unstoppable Nanooks Friday night. Jesse Blandford finished his work early, scoring his 26 points in the game during the first half. Jeremy Head added 18.

The Nanook machine kept rolling Saturday night as Nome put up 93 points on the board to the Wolverines' 46. Blandford knocked down 28 while Head added 20. Charles Smeaton led Dillingham with 24.

The Nome boys varsity team will next head to Valdez for its tournament Feb. 12. The Nanooks face Class 4A Palmer in the first round.

In junior varsity action, Nome battled Golovin at home. Nathan Blandford led Nome in a losing effort Friday night with 19 points. The Lynx won the game 92-65, led by the hot hands of Frank Amaktoolik and Travis Fagerstrom, who combined for 55 points.

The scoreboard didn't change much on Saturday as Golovin again dispatched the JV Nanooks 95-62. Nathan Blandford again led Nome with 16, while Jeremiah Johnson added 11. Darrell Takak, Amaktoolik and Fagerstrom each scored at least 20 points to lead Golovin in the win.

The closest games of the weekend in Nome came as Nome's and Dillingham's junior high boys battled on the court. Dillingham held the upper hand both nights, winning 32-29 on Friday and 46-36 on Saturday. Dominique Hall led Nome on Friday with 26. John Smith scored 14, followed by Tyler Eide with 8 to lead Nome on Saturday.

More basketball action is on tap this weekend in Nome as the 2009 Norton Sound Shootout comes to town. Nome's JV boys will again face Golovin and also play Brevig Mission and Shishmaref.

4th quarter magic for Lady Nanooks

The Lady Nanooks basketball team jumped back to winning ways last weekend with a pair of fourth-quarter comebacks on the road in Dillingham.

Led by Rachael Bauman, who poured in 11 of her 16 points in the final quarter, Nome pulled out a 38-33 win against the Lady Wolverines Friday night. Vanessa Tahbone added 10 in the effort. The Lady Nanooks were able to keep Dillingham to just three points in the fourth.

Nome came alive again late in the game on Saturday, blanking the Lady Wolverines in the fourth. The 12-0 run by the Lady Nanooks in the final period of the game put them over the top by a final score of 33-29. Tahbone scored 10 of her game-high 24 points in the fourth.

The two wins bolster Nome's season record to 8-4.

The varsity team will travel to Barrow this weekend to play in the Whaler Invite. Other teams competing include Kenai, Barrow and Point Hope.

Nome's younger girls also showed their prowess on the court, besting Dillingham two nights in a row.

Nome's junior high girls team toppled Dillingham Middle School 42-27 Friday night. Sisters Devynn and Dylan Johnson combined for 30 points for the evening, with Devynn knocking down 20 to Dylan's 10. Every girl on the team put points on the board in the game.

With an extra quarter to play on Saturday night, Nome lit up the scoreboard. To give the girls extra playing time, five quarters were played in Saturday's match-up. Nome won the game 51-18. Devynn Johnson scored 23, while sister Dylan several smaller turbines in Nome rather than a few big ones, the Banner Wind project has the same equipment that would be used in a smaller setting. While it takes 18 of the Entegritty turbines to provide up to 25 percent of Nome's power at optimal winds, four to six turbines of this size will be sufficient for many area villages. "A lot of thought was put in as to what size of windmill we would put up on the hill," Brown said.

By having Nome put the turbines to the test first, technical expertise and spare parts will be available in the region, rather than having to be brought in from the Lower 48. "The idea is to make Nome a hub for windmill technology," Brown said.

Jackson and Costanti note that having the villages develop their own wind farms will also support Nome. "The whole hub-and-spoke system doesn't work without spokes," Jackson said.

More turbines in the region can support one or more local full-time workers to perform maintenance and repair work. Nome's wind farm in isolation really should only require a part-time worker, they said. "The local piece is so important," Costanti said. "We could bring someone from out of the region [for maintenance or repair], but we don't want to."

While no firm plans have been laid out yet, BSNC President and CEO Tim Towarak said the regional Native corporation would like to see wind projects installed in area villages. Towarak said any new effort would likely not be started until next year. "We want to make sure the bugs are worked out here [in Nome]," he said last Thursday.

Towarak said BSNC would approach villages in the region to gauge interest and ability to install a project. He said the 50-50 partnership between BSNC and Sitnasuak would serve as a model for any new projects. "So far we like what we've seen," Towarak said. "We think it will work out in the villages. We think it will be a benefit to the communities."

Project was not a breeze

While it sprang up quickly, building the wind farm was not without its challenges. One major hurdle came when the farm had to be reconfigured from its initial design location in the Snake River valley to its home on Banner Ridge. The move meant building three miles of road, running a long utility line to connect to the existing power grid and a complex layout for the 18 turbines, themselves.

"The terrain up there is more complex than any other site we've worked on," Jackson said. Costanti and Jackson said they had to redesign the layout of the turbines several times to achieve optimal performance. Factors such as the shape of the ridge, the depth of bedrock and the effect of the turbines upon each other resulted in the final spacing of the windmills being much more spread out than what is found at a standard wind farm, Jackson said.

By moving the project from the valley to the ridge, Jackson and Costanti estimate a gain of 30 percent more production from the increased wind.

In addition to the move, the complexities of the logistics of ordering and shipping all the necessary materials to Nome with little to no lead time upped the ante all the more. The team had to be a bit creative in getting all the goods to Nome, at one point convincing Homer and Chugach electric companies to sell them transformers in order to get the equipment barged to Nome before the end of the shipping season.

"We had a running clock all the time," BSNC's Towarak said.

Reducing diesel

When running at optimum speeds, the Banner Wind's farm should produce 1.17 megawatts of electricity, about a quarter of Nome's power need. It is projected that the project could reduce Nome's consumption of diesel fuel for its generators by 200,000 gallons a year.

By being able to provide about 25 percent of Nome's power, the Banner Wind project is dubbed "low-penetration." Jackson and Costanti said such low-penetration projects—those that provide up to 30 percent of the local demand—can be integrated into local utility systems without extensive alterations.

Even a low-penetration farm can bring down the cost of power and reduce the amount of fossil fuel burned. "It's not that we're a bunch of greenies," BSNC's Brown said. "The board [of directors] wanted to see and make a difference in the lives of Bering Straits shareholders."

This style of wind farm needs to be looked at as supplemental to the current diesel-generated power. Without a way to store the power from the turbines, a community could not rely upon wind alone for reliable and consistent electricity. The turbines are designed to be most efficient in winds of approximately 30 mph. At least 9 mph of wind is needed for the turbines to produce power. The turbines will automatically put on the brakes in wind speeds of 56 mph or greater.

Economics

Initially BSNC pursued funding the wind farm with a federal grant through the U.S. Department of Agriculture. When word on the grant application was delayed over and over again, BSNC and Sitnasuak were pushed into a corner where they had to decide to move ahead on the project with their own funds or suspend it for a year.

Ultimately deciding to go forward, the two corporations raised funds through bank financing and private equity.

Banner Wind will see revenue from the project through the sale of electricity to Nome Joint Utility System, the sale of carbon credits and tax benefits. Jackson said the tax benefits for a project can be worth 30 percent to 40 percent of the capital costs for a project.

Jackson acknowledges a focus on getting grant funding for building such projects, and says he can't argue against the cost benefit of completing a wind farm with free money. But he also stresses that with the tax incentives, wind projects can also stand on their own economics while producing energy at a cheaper cost than diesel.

"It's all about replacing the diesel fuel," Costanti said.

Chamber of Commerce tracks region's renewable energy projects

By Laurie McNicholas

Mitch Erickson, executive director of the Nome Chamber of Commerce, praised the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board Jan. 29 at their meeting in Nome for the company's plans to install vertical axis wind turbines at two test sites in the region.

Erickson also invited the NSEDC board and staff to attend Banner Wind's ribbon-cutting ceremony for the 18 new turbines on Banner Peak that evening at Old St. Joe's.

He noted that Katie Peterson, NSEDC community development coordinator who helped refine ideas for the company's renewable energy project, had attended an energy summit sponsored by the chamber and Kawerak Inc. in April 2006.

Following last week's NSEDC meeting, Erickson told The Nome Nugget the summit had brought together state, federal, University of Alaska and private renewable energy specialists with organizations and individuals from the region to discuss ways to develop and finance alternatives to diesel fuel for both electrical generation and heating homes and businesses.

"We soon realized any reduction in electrical generation costs would require a long lead time and a big price tag," Erickson recalled. "However, we found we could have an effect by focusing on heating our homes and businesses. In the process we realized the following:

- There was a lack of expertise in the state.
- Oil will always be the primary source of heat; renewable energy will be secondary.
- Homes and businesses need to be energy efficient before installing renewable energy systems in them.
- Tax incentives are not a big part of an individual's decision-making process, but they are for businesses.
- Nome has more solar insolation (radiation) than Tucson, Ariz., from March through July."

Summit participants keep in touch with Erickson by e-mail as they develop projects. By testing available technologies, he hopes they will find a cost-effective application that can be duplicated throughout the region. The following is his update on ongoing renewable energy projects.

Renewable energy projects

Bering Straits Native Corp. has installed a 17 kW array of PV solar panels on the Bering Straits (Old Federal) Building in Nome to cut its electric energy costs. Due to the high costs of purchasing, shipping and installing the panels, tax credits are necessary to make the project feasible. The solar panels are working well, according to a company spokesman.

In a joint venture, BSNC and Sitnasuak Native Corp. installed 18 Entegritty EW 15 wind turbines last summer on corporate land at Banner Peak. The turbines are rated at 50 kW with the ability to produce 1 megawatt of wind energy and are connected to the Nome power grid.

NSEDC has funded an innovative project to install two vertical axis wind turbines for thermal heating at two test sites—one in Nome and the other at Unalakleet. Each turbine is rated at 10 kW. The vertical turbines do not need a large tower like the horizontal axis turbines. If proven effective, they can be attached to each household in the region. The goal of this project is to see if wind energy is a cost-effective way to provide thermal heat.

Gary Hart of Nome has installed a Southwest Windpower "Whisper 200" horizontal wind turbine to provide thermal heating for his home. He also has installed a "Heliodyne" flat panel solar hot water system for space heating on the south side of the home. He has a fuel oil boiler and hot water baseboard heating system. This is the first wind and solar combination project for thermal heating in the region.

Dave McDowell of Nome is installing an Apricus solar thermal system using 60 evacuated tube solar collectors. His home has a fuel oil boiler and hot water radiant floor system. Solar collectors are connected to provide both domestic hot water and space heating. The system is located on the east and south sides of his home.

Shaktoolik Native Corp. has installed two Southwest Windpower "Skystream 3.7" horizontal axis wind turbines to provide electricity for the store and corporate office in Shaktoolik. The turbines are rated at 1.9 kW continuous and 2.6 kW peak. The tower heights are 40 feet and 80 feet. Excess energy is "net metered" back to the grid.

Jim Adams of Nome has installed a Southwest Windpower "Skystream 3.7" to provide electricity for his home. Excess energy will flow back into the grid.

Wilderness Ski-doo of Nome installed a 1.7kW array of "PV" solar panels to generate electricity.

Erickson is installing evacuated tube solar hot water panels for heating his home. Two 30-tube units will be located on the east side of his house.

Last month the Chamber of Commerce sponsored a community seminar on solar thermal heating and conducted a free workshop to certify installers of the Apricus brand solar panels. Twenty-five individuals attended the training session. The chamber's goal is to see a number of these units installed by mid-February.

All of the above projects have been funded by private enterprise. Several additional projects are on the drawing board, including a mix of evacuated tube and flat panel solar panels and a vertical turbine for electrical generation.

YOU KNOW me...

Traveling the state as a member of the Alaska Commission on Aging, I've learned the importance of affordable local senior services. Too often, loved ones must be moved hundreds of miles from home communities, especially when health issues such as Alzheimer's disease are involved.

Studies now indicate nearly 50 percent of Americans will experience Alzheimer's or similar problems at age 85 and older.

The Commission serves in an advisory capacity to the State to ensure that when services are needed they will be available for all Alaskans, close to home. We're also promoting ways to stay brain-healthy as we age.

Palin appoints Olson to Alaska Health Care Commission

Governor Sarah Palin last week announced her appointments to the Alaska Health Care Commission, appointing State Senator Donnie Olson of Golovin to the 10-member commission. The commission is charged with making recommendations for a statewide plan to address the quality, accessibility and availability of health care for all Alaskans. The commissioners are tasked to develop and recommend by January 15, 2010 a health care policy. That policy should include personal responsibility, cost-cutting, safe water and sewer systems, a sustainable health care workforce, increasing insurance coverage, and universal health care access.

Senator Olson has represented Northwest Alaska in the Alaska State Senate since 2000. He is a physician, commercial pilot and reindeer herder. Olson earned a bachelor's degree in chemistry from the University of Minnesota, a medical degree from Oral Roberts University School of Medicine, and a law degree from the University of Colorado School of Law. He chairs the Community and Regional Affairs Committee, and sits on the Senate Finance Committee. Olson was nominated by Senate President Gary Stevens to fill a non-voting seat representing the Senate on the commission.

Other commission members are Larry Stinson M.D., of Palmer; C. Keith Campbell of Seward; Jeffrey W. Davis of Anchorage; Jay Butler M.D., of Anchorage; Valerie Davidson of Anchorage; Wayne Stevens of Juneau; Ryan Smith of Soldotna; Linda Hall of Anchorage and State Representative Wes Keller.

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor Julie Yoder Elmore
Community United Methodist Church

Passionate Worship — According to the Merriam-Webster Dictionary Online, one of the definitions of passionate is "capable of, affected by, or expressing intense feeling." Worship, according to United Methodist Bishop Robert Schnase, "describes those times we gather deliberately seeking to encounter God in Christ. We cultivate our relationship with God and with one another as people of God." Doing daily devotions is a private time with God, while worship is meant to be done in community. Worship is about praising God through music, through prayer, through being together as people of God. Passionate Worship is about giving our all in worship — singing out; lifting up loved ones in prayer; sharing what is on our hearts for the glory of God.

In Isaiah 6:1-8, Isaiah recounts a personal encounter with God while in the temple. His experience was transforming. While there, he saw the presence of God — there on a throne and the hem of God's robe filling the whole temple. God was present to him in a big way. Here Isaiah felt that he was a man with unclean lips living amongst others with unclean lips and did not feel worthy to be in that place seeing and experiencing God. Upon hearing Isaiah express this, one of the seraphs who were attending to God came down and touched a live coal to Isaiah's lips, purifying Isaiah's lips and purifying Isaiah of his sins. He was made clean — he was transformed and brought to wholeness. Through this transformation — this encounter with God — Isaiah was able to accept God's call for him to be a prophet in his time.

When we come to worship on any given Saturday or Sunday, do we expect to be changed by the experience — to encounter God? In worship do we sing out in praise to God? Do we "make a joyful noise to the Lord," as Psalm 100 encourages us to? The idea is to create an atmosphere of praise to God where all can praise God, even the one accompanying the singing and those leading worship. When we give our all, God is faithful and the Holy Spirit will indeed work within our hearts to transform us. Would not all of us like to leave worship with our hearts on-fire, filled, and ready to go out into our mission field and invite people to be part of this awesome experience? If you are not currently part of a worshipping community, I encourage you to find a church home where you can encounter God and expect to be transformed.

The Miller & Piscoya family say "QUYANNA" to all people who sent cards & flowers, called from near & far, stopped by our houses to visit & those that brought all that delicious food. We appreciate your love & support during this difficult time.

We also acknowledge & thank Dr. Head & Dr. Liu at NSHC for working so hard to keep Kenny alive, & thanks also to all the nurses that responded, as well as the lab staff, the x-ray staff, pharmacy staff & the respiratory staff. Thanks to Julie Renwick who was there for us & did an excellent job in assisting the family with all the details. You all did a great job & the family could tell you all worked hard for Kenny. Our family truly appreciates the care shown by all the NSHC staff with the loss of our brother.

We want to thank the EMS staff for responding so quickly to bring Kenny to the hospital. You did a great job! We also want to thank Leon Boardway & Raymond Merrill for helping Kenny until the EMS crew arrived.

We thank & y Miller Jr. for digging the grave, TUMET CONSTRUCTION for the use of the equipment to dig the grave, Richard & Harvey Miller for making the cross & outer box, the ladies who made the flowers, Eileen Norbert for doing an excellent job to coordinate the potluck dinner & especially to all the people that cooked for the potluck, Kirk Reynolds for his excellent skills in playing the piano at the service & most of all, thanks to the Our Saviors Lutheran Church staff who allowed us to have the opportunity to say our last good bye's to Kenny. All the pallbearers did a great job with the casket before, during & after the service. Thanks to you all. Thanks Kimberly Gooden for doing an excellent job putting the program together.

Alice Virginia (Aamaq) Anagick

Alice Virginia (Aamaq) Anagick was born on March 5, 1945 at Egavik to Joseph and Anna (Savetilik) Etageak. She died January 21, 2009 at the Norton Sound Regional Hospital. She was 63 years of age.

Alice Virginia (Aamaq) Anagick

Alice graduated from Mt. Edgecumbe High School on May 14, 1965 and went on to take college courses. Although her dream was to obtain a college degree, she was inspired by education and encouraged her children to further theirs.

Aamaq and "Gimbo" were married on April 10, 1971 behind their cabin, across from Silvertip on the Unalakleet River. They lovingly raised their children Langford Adams Jr., McGann Anagick and LaVerne Anagick. Their grandchildren are Lanford Adams III, Chasity Adams and Gabriel Anagick.

'Amm', as known by her grandchildren, loved to bake bread, gather food and greens, cook, and go for truck rides. Above all, her heart belonged to her grandchildren who she helped raise.

Alice cherished the subsistence way of life and instilled that lifestyle in her children and grandchildren. She especially enjoyed camping at the fall fish camp at Whalebacks on Labor Day weekend. Alice often took pleasure in volunteering her time to help others receive Public Assistance. She worked many years with BIA (1970-1979), BSSD, and the Unalakleet Native Corporation.

Alice is survived by her husband Gimbo, children Langford, McGann, LaVerne; grandchildren Kimberly, Langford III, Chasity, Brandon, Gabriel and Ada; mother Anna Etageak; sisters Threasa Nanouk and Betsy Pleasant; brothers Lawrence and Richard; nieces and nephews (19), and many friends and family.

She was preceded in death by her father Joseph Etageak; sisters Ida Grace and Ada Grace; brother Donald; maternal grandparents; Grace and Savetilik; paternal grandparents Ida and Etageak.

Prior to her passing, Alice gave herself to the Lord.

Her friendly greeting's smile will be missed by all. Peace to her memory.

Kenny Miller

Kenny was born at camp at Nook (his official birth place shows Nome) on September 3, 1953 to Andrew Sr. and Hannah Miller. Kenny died January 23 in Nome.

Kenny graduated from Nome High School with the class of 1972. In March 1974 he went to Berkeley, CA to attend the Berkeley Welding Training and received a welding certificate. From September 1982 to February 1983, Kenny attended the Alaska Vocational Skill Center in Seward and received a certificate in Building Maintenance.

Kenny first started working in the butcher shop, cutting meat at Stop Shop and Save from 1979-1982, attended Voc Center for training and returned to work periodically for Chuck Fagerstrom on various projects over approximately the next 25 years. Both Chuck and Kenny taught each other how to tackle big projects as they worked to complete them; for example, bringing the huge Solomon building into town to Osborne, building the shop, repairing heavy equipment, and the last big job was assisting Chuck to build his home. He also worked for a summer as a marine deck hand for a local tug company. His last place of employment was working for the Bering Straits Development Company as a laborer at the Rock Creek mine from May to September 2007 and again from April to November 2008.

Kenny loved the subsistence way of life. He loved to eat Eskimo food with family and friends. He was an expert berry picker. He took pride in how clean his berries were and he knew where the best spots were. (Sometimes he wouldn't share that information). He really enjoyed fishing, especially when the family went seining up the river. After each fishing trip, he took pride in making sure that the fish dried perfectly every time, by cutting and hanging them exactly right. He spent hours in wet weather tending to the fish to make sure the rain didn't ruin them. He learned to cut fish expertly (he had a great teacher, his mom) and for those who weren't as expert as he was, he let them know. He made himself available to help anyone with fishing. He enjoyed duck hunting and moose hunting, but fishing was his favorite.

As a good carpenter, he was also creative and the family saw the results of his creativity with his wood-carvings and crafts. Because of his carpentry skills, he volunteered his time to help his sister and brothers build and/or repair their summer camps and homes as well as taking care of his mom's house.

Because of his medical limitations during his youth, he was a spectator, not a participant in sports; however, he thoroughly enjoyed watching City League and Iditarod basketball games every year. He loved challenging his mom (and anyone else who visited) with Chinese checkers, Scrabble and Snertz. Because he was an avid reader, he had a jumpstart with Scrabble when playing with mom. His passion for reading was learning about history, especially German war history. He spent hours at the Kegoayah Kozga Library reading and checking out his favorite books. He read a book a day, no matter how many pages it had. When asked what he wanted for Christmas or birthdays, his response was always, "a subscription to Newsweek." And if that magazine was late, we all knew it. He devoured that magazine from cover to cover and kept up with the world weekly and then informed the rest of the family.

Kenny was a kind hearted and humble person. During the last couple of years of his mother's life, he gave 100 percent of his time to care for her. The rest of the family could not give that much, but Kenny did. He took her fishing, berry picking and to camp on weekends and as her health worsened, he would just take her for rides as she loved being outdoors and loved her subsistence lifestyle too. After she passed away he had a difficult time adjusting to life without her.

Kenny was a proud member of Bering Straits Native Corporation, Sitsasuak Native Corporation and Nome Eskimo Community and attended every meeting possible.

Kenny is survived by his sisters, Carol and husband Roy Piscoya; Barbara (Tiny) Miller of Kenai; brothers, Andrew Jr. and wife Mary Miller; Richard and wife Angela Miller; Harvey and wife Nina; Alexine (Snowball) Miller and Marlin Miller of Kotzebue. His parents Andrew Sr. and Hannah Miller, brothers Eddie, Frankie and James, and sisters Sharon Miller and Gladys Miller Crow preceded him in death. Kenny did not have children of his own, but loved all his many nieces and nephews and worked hard to teach them about the importance of subsistence and our culture and traditions. He encouraged them to continue with the weekly Eskimo dinners to keep family in contact with each other.

Cherish memories of him and remember him as a good, kind person, with a good sense of humor and helpful to all.

Arlene Lorraine Soxie

Arlene Lorraine Soxie (Atqaq), 61, died January 26 at the Alaska Native Medical Center in Anchorage.

A Unalakleet resident and a tribal member of the Native Village of Unalakleet, Arlene showed her Inupiaq love of family by helping to care for her mother Ellen who was moved to the Providence Extended Care center, where she died in December 2008.

Arlene loved the country, always ready to go ice fishing for trout (Arctic char) on the Unalakleet River and for salmon in the summer, where she and her family stopped for a bonfire dinner of fresh trout, or silvers (coho). She liked to berry-pick. She crocheted and knitted many handicrafts. She taught her grandchildren how to pray before meals and to say their evening prayers.

Arlene was preceded in death by her father, Jacob, her sisters Harriet and Jobina, her mother Ellen, brother Clifford, and an infant son, Harvey. She is survived by her companion Wilfred Eakon, sisters and their spouses Ruth and Alfred "Bill" Ivanoff, Vivian and Bob Foote, Mabel and Al Oyoumick, and Edna and Monroe Eakon. Arlene dearly loved her children Harriet, Harold and Wassillie, and her grandchildren Edward, Ariel, Nadia Eakon, Tre', Nadia, Sean and Shaylene. She will be missed by her numerous nephews and nieces and her friends.

Trooper Beat

On December 10, at 12:00 p.m., the AST received a report of vandalism at the Gambell School. Investigation continues.

On January 21, at approximately 1:00 p.m., the AST received a report of an assault. Investigation showed that a student of Andrew A. Anthony School in St. Michael had assaulted a teacher. While being escorted from the building the student also damaged property and spit on several faculty members. Charges are being referred to Juvenile Intake.

On January 24, at 11:00 p.m., Savoonga Village Public Safety Officer John Peratrovich received a report of a disturbance at a Savoonga residence. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Harold Kiyuklook, 32, of Savoonga, for Probation Violation. Kiyuklook was remanded to AMCC.

On January 25, at approximately 10:55 a.m., the AST received a report of Criminal Mischief. A rock was thrown through the window of a private residence in the village of St. Michael. The investigation is ongoing.

On January 26, at approximately 9:00 a.m., the AST received a report of an assault. Investigation showed that a student of Andrew A. Anthony school in St. Michael had assaulted a teacher. While in contact with school faculty the student also spit on a faculty member. Charges are being referred to Juvenile Intake.

On January 27, at 1:58 a.m., the AST received a report of a domestic disturbance at a Shishmaref residence. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Gideon Okpowruk, 23, of Shishmaref, for Assault 4. Okpowruk was remanded to the AMCC.

On January 27, at 10:45 a.m., the AST received a report of three overdue hunters from the village of Stebbins. The hunters are Bruce Pete, 32, Francis Pete Jr., 24, and Sydney Pete, 14, all from Stebbins. They left on January 26, and were expected back later the same day. A Search party has been deployed from the village of Stebbins. Searchers were able to locate all three individuals shortly after search efforts were initiated. The hunters were all in good condition and did not require any medical care. The snowmachines they were riding experienced mechanical problems along the trail. The AST thanks the Stebbins Search and Rescue group for their quick and effective response in locating the hunters.

On January 27, at 3:07 p.m., the AST received a report of an assault in the village of Shaktoolik.

Investigation revealed that Thomas Sampson, 58, of Shaktoolik had assaulted a family member. Thomas was arrested and transported to Unalakleet for arraignments on the charge of assault IV.

On January 29, at 4:30 p.m., the AST investigated a report of Sexual Abuse of a Minor. Details are being withheld pending further investigation.

Project No. 13298-000
Notice of Preliminary Permit Application Accepted for Filing and Soliciting Comments, Motions to Intervene, and Competing Applications
(January 8, 2009)

On October 9, 2008, Alaska Village Electric Cooperative filed an application, pursuant to section 4(f) of the Federal Power Act, proposing to study the feasibility of the Port Clarence Hydrokinetic Project (Port Clarence), located in Port Clarence, within an Unorganized Borough, between the communities of Teller and Brevig Mission, Alaska. The project uses no dam or impoundment.

The proposed Port Clarence project would consist of: (1) 2 proposed submerged Ocean Renewable horizontal axis crossflow turbines, with a total installed capacity of 300 kilowatts, (2) a proposed 6.5-mile-long, 7,200/12,400-kilovolt transmission line, and (3) appurtenant facilities. The project is estimated to have an annual generation of 1.3-gigawatt-hours, which would be sold to a local utility.

depth of knowledge and understanding of the State's finances. I look forward to working with all the new members of the House of Representatives and its leadership.

With lower oil prices we are faced with significant budgeting challenges. At this time it appears that the Operating Budget will have to depend on funds being drawn from the State's various savings accounts. The primary account is the Constitutional Budget Reserve into which $5 billion was deposited last year. The Capital Budget will undoubtedly be tied into the Federal Economic Stimulus package.

One immediate need is to develop a Federal Economic Stimulus Plan for Alaska. The Governor, Senate and House of Representatives need to agree upon a plan of distribution that provides both immediate and lasting benefit for all Alaskans regardless of where they live. It is an opportunity to provide Alaskans with jobs and to build needed lasting infrastructure. The House leadership has met recently with the Governor on this issue.

Another major issue is energy. The Governor unveiled her long term goal to have 50 percent of Alaska powered with renewable energy by the year 2020. In response to this need, the House has created a Special Committee on Energy; co-chaired by Rep. Edgmon, (D) from Dillingham and Rep. Millett (R) from the Mat-Su area. This committee will be meeting in Nome on February 8, 2009 from 1:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m. at Old St.

Joseph Hall to take testimony on the Governor's plan. They are also interested in hearing concerns and ideas from the general public as a part of their Nome visit.

Economic assistance is recognized as a priority by the Bush Caucus and the House Majority. Rural communities did not benefit from the decline in oil prices since bulk fuel purchases had to be made prior to the price drop in order to assure delivery during the summer. A second problem was created when the barge lines were unable to make scheduled fall barge deliveries. This has necessitated flying in fuel which drives the prices even higher. Electricity costs are caught in the same trap since their fuel had to be ordered during the period when prices were at their highest. I am not sure what a package might look like since it is so early in the new legislature.

Work by the Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs to recognize Alaska Territorial Guard members for their service continues. The Federal Government had planned to cut pension payments for ATG member. The Army has found a short term solution and will continue payments for another two months while Congress, led by the State's Delegation, is working a long term solution to get funding restored.

I am chairing the House Finance Subcommittees for the Department of Military and Veterans' Affairs and the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities. I have either been a member of these committees or chaired them since entering the Legislature.

At the present time there isn't any legislation which appears likely to pass, that I would identify as "unfriendly," but that can change as new bills are introduced and existing bill are amended; so this is something for which we must always watch. My main focus for the session will be on budget issues. As usual my concern with the Operating Budget is to assure that residents of our District do not lose essential services through budget cuts. On the Capital Budget side I will continue to push for improved health services, educational funding, airports improvements, new housing, ongoing sewer and water projects and individual community projects that provide local employment and needed infrastructure.

On a personal level, my health is continuing to improve. I can feel my strength increase each day. I can walk unassisted in the office or at home, but use a walker in the halls and on the street to increase stability. A fall during Christmas that put me back in the wheelchair for two weeks taught me to be cautious. But I'm back on my feet and hopefully, the stars are finally coming into alignment and I will be able to have a transplant sometime during the spring or early summer. I thank you all so much for the support you've given me during my tenure as your Representative and especially through these recent trying times. I look forward to seeing you all during the session and back home after adjournment.

If you have questions, concerns or suggestions, please contact my Juneau Office 1-800-478-3789 (phone); 1-907-465-3242 (fax); or send me an email.

ments and a few things on my agenda at this time are:

In addition to the Finance committee, I am chair of the Community and Regional Affairs Committee, and I have seats on the Education committee, the Education District Cost Factors Commission, the Legislative Council, Regulation Review Committee, and the Legislative Budget and Audit Committee. I have also been appointed to the Governor's Health Care Commission. With the diversity of these committee seats, I will be busy and will have a voice in many issues important to the district.

I have been working with Rep. Foster and Sen. Hoffman and the Governor's staff to bring some kind of relief to the residents of Emmonak. Since their plight has risen to national attention in recent weeks, that has brought a deep interest from all over the country for helping. The Governor announced this week that she will not declare a disaster. Now that we are back in session, other options are on the table; and so the Senate Finance Committee may introduce legislation to try to help all Alaskans struggling to pay their fuel bills.

I know that it is not just Emmonak that is struggling due to the high cost of energy. Energy issues continue to be of grave concern to myself and other Legislators and will certainly be at the forefront this session. However, the current price of oil will make it difficult to garner the support for creating or expanding programs, even for energy relief. In fact, it will be difficult to build even a maintenance budget, and it is highly unlikely that we will have the level of spending in the capital budget that we have enjoyed the last few years, either. The effects of lower oil prices will undoubtedly have an effect on the final budget that will eventually be passed; though we are very fortunate to have saved the funds we did in prior years when oil money was plentiful. We will need them.

For those of you who can attend, the House Energy Committee will be in Nome and Kotzebue to present their Statewide Energy Report and take public testimony. The information on these meetings is: Sat-

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE REGULATIONS OF THE ALASKA DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND GAME

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game (ADF&G) proposes to adopt regulation changes in Title 5 of the Alaska Administrative Code, dealing with waters important for the spawning, rearing, or migration of anadromous fish, including the following:
5 AAC 95.011 is proposed to be changed as follows:

The Atlas to the Catalog of Waters Important for the Spawning, Rearing, or Migration of Anadromous Fishes and Catalog of Waters Important for the Spawning, Rearing, or Migration of Anadromous Fishes (Atlas and Catalog), which are adopted by reference in 5 AAC 95.011, will be revised and updated.

Alaska Statute 16.05.871 requires, among other actions, that the Commissioner of the ADF&G "specify" the rivers, lakes and streams or portions of them that are important for the spawning, rearing or migration of anadromous fish. The Commissioner must review plans and specifications of any proposed work or use occurring within a specified anadromous river, lake, or stream. If the Commissioner determines that the plans and specifications provide for the proper protection of fish and game the project will be approved and a Fish Habitat Permit will be issued by the ADF&G, Division of Habitat. The Catalog and Atlas identify and list these anadromous waters and are used by the Commissioner to determine whether such a permit is required for any particular project.

Several revisions are proposed to be made to the Atlas and Catalog. The list of rivers, lakes, and streams will be updated, including additions, deletions, and changes to the legal descriptions of many of these waters. Minor revisions will be made to the introduction of the Catalog and Atlas, including updates to ADF&G regional contact information. Species-specific information will be used in place of undifferentiated species information wherever possible. Data in the Catalog and Atlas will be converted from North American Datum (NAD) 1927 to NAD 1983. The Atlas will be updated to reflect this conversion, resulting in higher quality full color maps. Additionally, the Atlas and Catalog will be updated to reflect regulation changes resulting from Executive Order 114 which transferred functions related to protection of fish habitat in rivers, lakes, and streams from the Department of Natural Resources to the Department of Fish and Game.

You may comment on the proposed regulation changes, including the potential costs to private persons of complying with the proposed changes, by submitting written comments to Kimberly Klein, Alaska Department of Fish and Game, 333 Raspberry Rd. Suite 2068, Anchorage, Alaska 99518 or by e-mail to kim.klein@alaska.gov. The comments must be received no later than March 13, 2009.

The proposed changes for all six regions of Alaska (Southeastern, Southcentral, Southwestern, Western, Arctic, and Interior) are available for inspection and copying at the ADF&G offices in Anchorage at 333 Raspberry Rd., in Fairbanks at 1800 College Rd., and in Douglas at 802 3rd St.; the Alaska Resources Library in Anchorage; and the State Library in Juneau. The ADF&G offices in Craig, Palmer, Petersburg, Bethel, Cordova, Delta Junction, Dillingham, Dutch Harbor, Glennallen, Haines, Homer, Ketchikan, King Salmon, Kodiak, Sand Point, Nome, Sitka, Soldotna, Tok, Wrangell, and Yakutat have copies of the proposed changes for their local region. If you are a person with a disability who needs a special accommodation in order to participate in this process, please contact Kimberly Klein at 267-2812 no later than February 23, 2009 to ensure that any necessary accommodations can be provided. Electronic equivalents of the review documents and the atlas maps are also available through the ADF&G website at

After the public comment period has ended, the ADF&G will either adopt these or other provisions dealing with the same subject, without further notice, or decide to take no action on them. The language of the final regulations may vary from that of the proposed regulations. YOU SHOULD COMMENT DURING THE TIME ALLOWED IF YOUR INTERESTS COULD BE AFFECTED.

Statutory Authority: AS 16.05.020 and 16.05.871

Statutes Being Implemented, Interpreted, or Made Specific: AS 16.05.871

Fiscal Information: The proposed regulation changes are not expected to require an increased appropriation.

Clarabelle Towarak Nance

Clarabelle Towarak Nance, 51, died Jan. 19, 2009, at Alaska Native Medical Center.

Clarabelle Towarak Nance

A memorial service was held at 1 p.m. on January 22, 2009 at the First Covenant Church of Anchorage. Honorary pallbearers included her brothers, Clarence Jr., Tim, Sam, Ike and Dennis Towarak; and friend, David Parker.

Clarabelle "Gungoo" Nance was born Nov. 24, 1957, in Unalakleet to Clarence and Guerie Towarak. Her Inupiaq name is "Panigruaq." She graduated from Covenant High School in 1975. She was active in student council, basketball and cheerleading and was crowned tournament queen her senior year. As a classmate she was a friend to all. She furthered her education at North Park College in Chicago and at the University of Alaska Anchorage. She married Louis Nance on Jan. 21, 1984 in Unalakleet.

She was employed by Cook Inlet Tribal Council as a payroll accounting technician.

"As a dedicated fan, Clarabelle enjoyed watching her sons play basketball and baseball at East High School," her family wrote. "She was overjoyed to receive flowers from her beloved "Sista Gal," Marisa Nance.

Clarabelle excelled in caring for her family. She was a hard worker and always had a good job. Her bright smile and hug brought warmth not only to her children, family and friends but also to her co-workers. Many received notes of kindness and love which exemplified her generous personality.

Life will be quieter without her laughter. Peace to her memory.

She is survived by her daughter Marisa Nance; her sons James and Clarence Nance and Louis Nance IV; and husband Louis Nance III of Anchorage; mother Guerie Towarak; siblings and their spouses, Clarence and Linda, Tim and Rose, Sam and Nita, Ike and Dennis Towarak, all of Unalakleet; Isabelle and Chester Millett of Anchorage, Annabelle and Dave Cunningham, Willa and Gary Eckenweiler of Unalakleet, and Cindy and Tom Massie of Temecula, Calif.; sisters-in-law, Marlene Towarak of Unalakleet and Ivy 'Jewell' Parchman of Indiana; numerous nephews, nieces, friends and family, many of whom reside in Nome.

She was preceded in death by her daughter, Rachel Lynne Nance; father, Clarence Towarak Sr.; brothers, Ambrose and Matthew Towarak; sister-in-law, Shirlee Towarak; nephew, Gabe Towarak; father- and mother-in-law, Louis Owen and Lydia Savok Nance; and brother-in-law, James Nance.

Condolences may be sent to Annabelle Cunningham, PO Box 248, Unalakleet, AK 99684.

Sen. Begich supports amendment ending gubernatorial appointments to Senate

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich announced January 26 that he will co-sponsor a bill being introduced to amend the U.S. Constitution to end appointments to the U.S. Senate by governors. Wisconsin Sen. Russ Feingold plans to introduce legislation this week that would require special elections in the event of a Senate seat vacancy.

"I am pleased to support this legislation which is in line with what Alaska voters have already decided — that the only appropriate way to fill a U.S. Senate seat is by a vote of the people," Sen. Begich said. "The reurday, Feb. 7 in Kotzebue at the Northwest Arctic Borough Assembly Chambers, 163 Lagoon St; and on Sunday, Feb. 8 in Nome at Old St. Joe's Hall, 407 Bering St.

My office has received a high level of interest and concern regarding some of the energy programs that are available, so I thought I would provide you information on some of them.

Low Income Energy Assistance Program (LIEAP). You may qualify for heating assistance this winter even if you have been denied in the past for being over income. Prior to this spring the State only operated the federally funded LIEAP program which capped income at 150% of the poverty income guidelines. In May of 2008, the Legislature created the Alaska Heating Assistance Program (AKHAP) for households with income between 150% and 225% of the poverty income guidelines. You can pick up an application at any Department of Public Assistance office, download one at www.hss.state.ak/dpa/heat or call 1-800-470-3058 to request an application by mail. It can take up to 45 days to process your application. The fastest way to receive benefits is to make sure your application is completed in full and you have attached any necessary documentation. Payments are made directly to your heating vendor and a notice will be sent to you informing you of your benefit amount if you are found eligible.

AHFC has three programs to help reduce energy bills. The objective of each is to make a home more energy efficient so energy costs will be lowered for the homeowner after making some modifications. For information, call their hotline 1-877-325-2508, or visit their website www.ahfc.state.ak.us/energy. A brief explanation of each:

- The AHFC Weatherization Program is for eligible applicants who meet income guidelines to provide free weatherization assistance for homes, rentals, and multi-family dwellings.

- The AHFC Home Energy Rebate Program is to rebate homeowners some of their expense in making energy-efficiency improvements to their home. It does not have income eligibility requirements.

- The AHFC Second Mortgage Program for Energy Conservation is for borrowers to apply for financing to make cost-effective energy improvements to owner-occupied properties.

I was happy to hear a road to Nome mentioned in the Governor's State of the State speech on Thursday, January 22. It is encouraging to hear of her support since it has been discussed and then forgotten for a long time. Since specifics were not provided, we will have to assess just what her vision and intentions are. She also announced a spending freeze for state spending, which includes a hiring freeze as well as a freeze on spending for non-essential purchases. This was expected given the state of our economy and the sustained low price of oil for most of this fiscal year.

SB 3 is legislation I introduced this year, which will allow statistics, analyses, and other relevant information from the Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission to be available to regional development organizations (ARDORs), at no cost to them. The objective is to provide ARDORs, especially those with coastal and fishery interests, with information free of charge, as a modest way to lessen the strain on their budgets. No confidential or personal information would be released under this legislation.

SB 4 is another piece of legislation I introduced to make needed changes to the Coastal Management Program.

This bill would re-establish a Coastal Policy Board. Coastal communities in Senate District T and others in the state need greater authority over regional development activities, and I am again pushing for realistic changes to a program which has been unreasonably impacted over the past several years.

Recent visitors from the district to my office are James Akerelrea of Scammon Bay, Frank Aguchak of Scammon Bay, Curtis Nayokpuk of Shishmaref, Esther Iyatunguk of Shishmaref, Rich Walker from Kotzebue, Milton "Smitty" Cheemuk from St. Michael, Josey Bahnke from Nome and Denise Michels from Nome.

With both new and returning staff in my office, I'd like to introduce you to them:

- Denise Liccioli is my Chief of Staff. She will take the lead on all finance issues, VPSO issues, and the general operation of the office.

- Tim Benintendi will be the lead on my personal legislation, and is also staff for my seat on the Legislative Council and Legislative Budget and Audit Committees. Tim Benintendi comes to my office this year, having worked 20 previous legislative sessions, including 12 for the Aleutians / Bristol Bay district under Rep. Carl Moses. Tim has held a variety of leadership staff jobs in the House and Senate, has worked in the finance arena, and has worked dozens of bills and resolutions. Tim has a degree in business management and is a Vietnam veteran.

- Kendri Cesar is primarily responsible for assisting me with my duties as Chair of the Community and Regional Affairs Committee. She is also my aide for education issues, including my seats on the Education Committee and Education District Cost Factor Commission. Kendri is Tlingit, from Juneau, and comes to us as a recent graduate from Dartmouth College, where she majoring in environmental studies and minored in Arabic language and literature. She is particularly interested in the environmental issues impacting rural Alaska and Alaska Natives, and looks forward to working with constituents to promote their vision of the future for Alaska.

- Patty Krueger will be the first person you will see and talk to as her main duties are to handle my phone, mail and calendar. She will also assist me with my seat on the Regulation Review Committee. Patty will be the lead on constituent issues. She is eager to assist you and will see that your concerns are addressed. When not in session Patty works as an Occupational Therapist providing physical rehabilitation services. She has a strong interest in the bush communities and worked for 15 years as a flight dispatcher in Southeast Alaska.

I like hearing from you so please call with your ideas and/or concerns; or if you will be in Juneau before April 19, come by my office. I wish each of you a happy, prosperous, and warm new year!

Don't forget to file for your PFD! The deadline is March 31, 2009.

cent controversies in Illinois and New York only underscore the need for a process that allows the people to decide who they want to represent them in the U.S. Senate.”

In November 2004, Alaska voters changed state law that had allowed gubernatorial appointments to the U.S. Senate. The “Trust the People” initiative stripped the power of the governor to fill U.S. Senate vacancies, and put in place a provision to fill a vacancy with a special election to occur 60 to 90 days after the seat becomes vacant.

“I support Sen. Feingold’s attempt at making this process for filling Senate vacancies uniform across the states. A vote of the people is the only truly democratic way to decide these important seats,” Begich said.

Special elections are already required to fill U.S. House seats.

NovaGold CEO sounds more optimistic on new life for Rock Creek

By Tyler Rhodes

While he stresses no decision has been made yet, the chief executive officer of the company that owns the Rock Creek Mine said last week that the option to restart the operation just outside of Nome is still firmly on the table.

NovaGold President and CEO Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse was in Nome to check up on the mine which suspended its gold production in November. While in town, he sat down with The Nome Nugget last Thursday for an interview in which he said reviewing a start-up plan for the mine is on NovaGold's short to-do list for its Nome operations.

Before any significant attention is placed on forming a potential restart plan, however, Van Nieuwenhuyse said other work needs to be accomplished at the mine site. First and foremost, he said, is the removal of water from behind the

Buy now, pay way later

Computer glitch has many Nome AC customers paying for summer purchases in February

By Tyler Rhodes

Nome resident Lisa Schobert noticed something funny when she went to check her bank balance online earlier this month.

Although she had not recently shopped at Nome's AC store, more than $200 worth of charges in four transactions were posted to her account, dragging her balance into the red. "[My husband] Phil and I knew we had not been to AC," she said.

Schobert is not alone. Several customers in Nome are in the same boat as many purchases they made from late May through July last year appeared all at once in early February against their debit and credit card balances.

According to Alaska Commercial Co. General Manager Walter Pickett, the problem can be traced back to one cash register. Early last summer, the AC store transitioned to new software and equipment to process credit and debit card transactions via high-speed Internet. "We converted our debit and credit card software to a new state-of-the-art program," Pickett said. "Before we were going over the phone line and taking up to three minutes to process transactions."

While a three-minute wait was a thing of the past for most of the regis-

Investment losses, tax payments slow NSEDC's growth

Company's performance over the past two years raises questions about its management and future

By Laurie McNicholas

The annual growth rate of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. slumped dramatically in 2007.

The company paid the Internal Revenue Service $5.3 million in back taxes and lost $5.2 on its investments. Taxes and investment losses are new experiences for the company.

NSEDC's net assets totaled $113.7 million at the end of 2007, a gain of $5.8 million for the year, but a decrease of more than $10 million compared to the company's $16 million profit in 2006. NSEDC posted profits of $16.7 million in 2005, $14.7 million in 2004 and $10.1 million in 2003.

NSEDC's profit margin more than doubled in 2008 compared to 2007, largely due to a one-time cash payment for the sale of some of its assets and a great increase in the value of its investment in Glacier Fish Co.

Offsetting those gains were enormous losses in the value of NSEDC's publicly traded securities, which dwarfed its investment losses in 2007. Preliminary figures reported last month indicate the company's net assets rose to $126.7 million by the end of 2008.

Here are some highlights of NSEDC's financial operations in 2007. The company dissolved its partnership in a crab harvesting subsidiary, Norton Sound Ventures LLC. In the process, NSEDC acquired 100 percent ownership of the Aleutian No. 1, a crab catcher vessel that fishes primarily brown crab in the Aleutian Islands area; and partial ownership of the crab vessels Alaska Beauty, Ocean Olympic, Pacific Star and the cod longliner Glacier Bay. NSEDC initially booked all of the vessels as limited liability companies. The Alaska Beauty subsequently was sold, and the Ocean Olympic and Pacific Star are for sale.

NSEDC assumed operation of the Aleutian No. 1 in August 2007, and Glacier Fish Co. continued to oper-

Letters

Dear Editor,

Your February, 12, 2009 article, "Alleged accusations of bribery come full circle before NSEDC board," rekindled my outrage about what I witnessed and what has transpired; more accurately, it is what remains undone that bothers me the most.

I was locked out of the meeting on November 6 but it didn't take me long to find out what happened in the executive session where the NSEDC board agreed to fire Bob Walsh. To this day, no one involved in this disgraceful action has said why they fired Bob except that Don Stiles, in front of the whole board and their attorney accused him of bribing Joe Garnie.

Letters to the editor must be signed and include an address and phone number. Thank yous and political endorsements are considered ads.

Editorial

The Best and the Worst

When times get tough, money scarce and jobs are lost, some of the ugly qualities of our society come to the surface. Folks in the Lower-48 are starting to see the cuthroats and back-stabbers in businesses and offices. Some folks will go to extremes to make themselves look good at the expense of their friends and fellow employees. Perhaps this is survival of the fittest and natural selection in action. Yet, in the midst of this highly competitive environment we can find true humanitarians who take a personal responsibility to reach out to those who need a helping hand.

It is also interesting to see how people seek for quality in hard times. Wall Street executives are wearing their Woolrich plaid jackets, Filson trousers, Plendleton shirts and LL Bean boots. Suddenly Nomeites are on the cutting edge of style. Now that's scary. It is also interesting to see how innovative folks can be. Snake oil salesmen by the thousands are crawling out from under the sidewalks. The internet is loaded with scam artists waiting to test the old English proverb, "A fool and his money are soon parted." Do we really have a rich relative who is Queen of Africa who has one foot in the grave and the other on a banana peel and ready to send us a few million bucks? Do we really believe our bank lost our account number and sent us an email requesting our help? Do we really think the IRS is e-mailing us for personal information so we can get our stimulus package? The only stimulus from that would be a good swift pick in the pants. Is half the world selling fake watches and sexual enhancement pills?

Isn't it amazing how creative are the ways to swindle and deceive. Remember if we didn't buy a lottery ticket, then we can't expect to win. If we don't have an Aunt Tessie in London, then we should not answer the email from the barrister who can't write the Queen's English. Remember if it sounds too good to be true, it probably isn't true. Don't give out personal information such as your social security number, bank account number or credit card information over the internet. Stay smart.

—N.L.M.—
"There's a sucker born every minute."
—Attributed to Phineas Taylor Barnum 1810-1891.

Bribing a director of an organization having $128 million is a very serious charge. When Veco officials bribed state legislators, the guilty legislators and corporation officials were sentenced to lengthy prison terms.

The NSEDC board has an obligation to investigate these accusations and there has been plenty of time to get that done. No one on the board said it didn't happen when I spoke up about it at NSEDC's meeting January 29, here in Nome. They all looked pretty ashamed of themselves, as well they should be.

Somebody is guilty of malfeasance; either it's Bob Walsh and Joe Garnie for participating in bribery or it's Don Stiles for falsely accusing them. I've already decided, but people who weren't there need to have enough information to form their own opinion about what happened; this should not be allowed to just fester.

Bob Walsh didn't deserve to be treated this way. He was doing a good job of restoring an organization plagued with director election fraud, internal turmoil, indiscriminant firings and a continuing struggle for power and control or our region's CDQ program wealth. We have a right to know the real reasons behind his firing.

Did he get in the way of the people who funneled millions of the region's CDQ program assets to themselves through the Siu Corporation? If that was the reason, he should have been commended for doing his job, not terminated.

Was it because he found out the board members who got us to buy into Glacier Fish Company without understanding the tax ramifications were culpable for leaving NSEDC liable for millions of dollars of back taxes, penalties and interest 14 years later? If that was the reason, they're the ones who should have been fired, not he.

Bob Walsh and Joe Garnie have had their reputations dragged through the mud by these reckless accusations. Don Stiles is suspected of making allegations of bribery and then failing to back them up. The NSEDC board has a fiduciary responsibility to the corporation and the residents of our 15 communities to evaluate the evidence, determine the truth, and punish the wrongdoers appropriately. They have avoided dealing with this matter too long; it's past time for them to do their duty. This needs to be put to rest.

Tim Smith,
Nome, AK.

Dear Nancy,

I concur with my friend Dean Peterson, as quoted in last week's Nome Nugget, "Personal attacks on board members are wrong, and nobody should be allowed to publicly degrade a board member," as Joe Garnie was by Don Stiles.

We know both men well. Joe built a global reputation as a musher. His kennel won the Iditarod as well as garnering several close finishes. Along among major mushers he has adhered to a regimen of traditional nutrition and training methods in his vocation.

His family has persisted in a rugged, traditional way of life that would exhaust all but the fittest. Joe is also an advocate in his community and regionally for health and education. That he speaks his own mind with empathy for those who have no

Rock Creek readying to drain tailings pond

State regulators, NovaGold near agreement on temporary shutdown plan for idled mine

By Tyler Rhodes

While even the sea is frozen along Nome's beaches, one of NovaGold's main concerns with its Rock Creek Mine just outside of town is water—more than 54 million gallons of it.

The water has collected behind the mine's tailings dam, which was originally designed to hold back primarily solids. Both state regulators and officials from NovaGold are hoping the dam walls will soon feel some relief as NovaGold treats and starts draining the water from the impoundment.

As soon as NovaGold can prove that the water from behind the dam, once treated, can meet the requirements spelled out for the mine in its regulatory permits, it should be able to start draining the pond. "We're hopefully just days away from treating water," Jack DiMarchi of the state Department of Natural Resource's Large Mine Permitting Team said Monday.

Officials from NovaGold and the state planned to meet Friday to finalize NovaGold's temporary closure plan for Rock Creek, according to DiMarchi. He estimates the plan should be approved by next week.

Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse, NovaGold's chief executive officer, was optimistic on the progress being made between the mine and state regulators. "There's good synergies working with the groups," he said.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said the water treatment plant is complete and going through its final adjustments. "We're just tweaking the chemical process," he said. The plant will take water from the tailings impound and treat it to what is known as the aquatic life standard—a standard more stringent than that for drinking water, he points out—before the water is injected underground.

The water build-up and construction of the dam have been the source of a back-and-forth between NovaGold and state regulators. The dam was not meant to hold primarily water. The facility, rather, was meant to contain mainly tailings—waste rock from the mining process, which are about 65 percent solid and 35 percent water—allowing water to evaporate out of the system.

A series of delays thwarting production at the mine and abundant snowfall last year led to the tailings storage facility taking on more water than anticipated. "We were probably mine's tailings dam (See related story above). NovaGold's next priority at the mine is to prepare for spring break-up, Van Nieuwenhuyse said. Once these current issues are tackled, he said NovaGold can then focus on the mine's future.

Since NovaGold's decision approximately four months ago to suspend production at the mine, the company's prospects have brightened a bit. At the time, NovaGold was flirting with bankruptcy as a $50 million financing deal fell through and millions of dollars in obligations were coming due.

The arrival of a new investor in January turned the company's financial picture around, placing the company on more stable footing. "We're in good shape now because we were successful in attracting a new equity partner," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. That partner, Electrum Strategic Resources LLC, entered into a $60 million deal, essentially buying itself a 30 percent stake in NovaGold with an option to invest more.

With a new investor on board and NovaGold's finances in better order, Van Nieuwenhuyse's tone toward a potential resumption of work at Rock Creek has a more positive ring. Van Nieuwenhuyse said Rock Creek has several positives working in its favor for a re-opening. The mine infrastructure is already built. Gold prices are riding high.

There are also challenges that remain to be solved, he said. One of the foremost while the mine was in operation was maintaining a stable work force. Van Nieuwenhuyse said the mine faced a high rate of turnover without ever being able to achieve full staffing. He said that while the mine needed 165 employees, Rock Creek was only able to round up approximately 130 workers at the most.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said he did not believe NovaGold would have trouble attracting former workers back to the mine who had to be laid off when its operations were suspended. He said the layoffs, while not welcomed, were necessary and believes that those who lost their jobs understood that. "It's never very much fun for anyone when you have to layoff people," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. "Certainly not for the people getting laid off."

Van Nieuwenhuyse also reported troubles in regard to the lure of Front Street which has helped pry miners' loot from their hands for more than a century. He said the company would train many workers only to lose them after a bender on the town. "The bottom line is we're just too damn close to Nome," he said.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said a more stringent screening program for new hires and a more significant training program for those who are brought on would be examined for any restart plan.

There are mechanical issues to be addressed at the mine. While the infrastructure is in, there are kinks that need to be worked out. One is the crusher, which played a role in the mine's suspension last fall. The feeder, which delivers the ore to the crusher, was not working properly in the cold. Solving the crusher problem is not a difficult task, Van Nieuwenhuyse said, but it was unfeasible at the time.

"It's a relatively easy fix if you can bring the equipment in," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. The problem, he said, is that the piece of equipment necessary for the crushing unit weighs 20 tons. "And it's a big 20-ton piece of equipment," he added. When the problem with the crusher was discovered, it was well past the barging season, and flying in the needed equipment was out of the question.

The problematic feeder on the current crusher worked by vibrating, which was supposed to move the ore into the unit. The consistency of the ore, which Van Nieuwenhuyse described as "hard ice cream," would cause it to stick to the feeder. The fix, which Van Nieuwenhuyse called a pan feeder, would essentially work by having paddles push the ore into the crushing unit.

In addition to working on the ground, the mine will also have to work on paper, Van Nieuwenhuyse said. The project needs to pencil out financially. Cost so far for the project has far exceeded what NovaGold planned. "We spent $220 million out there, which is about twice as much as we intended to spend out there," he said.

Even if everything fell into place and a re-opening of the mine was given the green light, Van Nieuwenhuyse said Rock Creek would not see production resume again at least until the warm days of 2010. "I don't see it as an '09 thing," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. "I don't want to get it up and running and then start up in the winter time."

Although the Rock Creek Mine had been producing gold before its suspension, the operation was not going at full steam. The mine was still working through what is described as the commissioning process, where the operation is tested piece by piece as it is brought up to speed. Van Nieuwenhuyse said the mill was not run consistently enough to test the entire operation fully.

If the mine is restarted, that process will be accomplished much more easily in the summer versus the winter. "It's definitely harder here working in the wintertime than the summertime," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. With other priorities ahead of a restart plan for Rock Creek, Van Nieuwenhuyse said the summer of 2010 would be the earliest any restart could occur. "We're not going to rush start-up," he said.

Outside of restarting the mine, Van Nieuwenhuyse said NovaGold could keep the facility under its current care and maintenance plan for a number of years. He said NovaGold has budgeted $7 million for Rock Creek for the 13 months covering last December to the end of 2009.

He also said a sale is a possibility. "It's a valuable asset," he said.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said NovaGold strongly considered selling the project as it nearly ran out of cash late last year. "That's something we looked very hard at last November," he said.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said there are currently 16 workers on site and another six or so contractors, mostly associated with the mine's water treatment facility.

moving more snow than dirt [last year],” Van Nieuwenhuyse said. “We didn’t have the capacity to deal with the snow.”

Second to resolving the issues in regard to water currently behind the dam, Van Nieuwenhuyse said preparing for future runoff is a priority for NovaGold. While Nome has received about half the precipitation so far this year than it had at this time in 2008 and Rock Creek now has a storm water runoff system in place, Van Nieuwenhuyse wants to make certain his crew is ready. “We’re going to focus on being prepared for break-up,” he said.

As for the water that is currently behind the dam, estimated to be more than 54 million gallons early this year, it must be treated since it has come into contact with the tailings. It also contains chemicals used in the mill to help extract gold from the rock, including cyanide.

It appears that some water has been working its way through the dam, DiMarchi said. A collection system at the toe of the dam has been routing water back to the pond. Tests have been ongoing to determine whether that water has been seeping from the impoundment or if it has been coming up from the ground. With only preliminary results available so far, DiMarchi said it appears that most of the water being returned to the pond originated there. “We think most of the water in the seepage collection system is just leakage from the dam. That’s good news, because it means there is a finite amount of water to be treated. Once the amount of water behind the dam decreases—through water treatment and discharge to the injection wells—there will be a corresponding decrease in the volume of seepage at the toe of the dam,” DiMarchi said. “We reasonably hope to see that water level go down over the next few months.”

DiMarchi speculated that the seepage can be partly attributed to the fact that only a relatively small volume of tailings were placed in the impoundment prior to the water. The addition of more tailings would have provided a better seal behind the dam and would have minimized the seepage.

DiMarchi also said the seepage collection system appears to be working well. “We’re not seeing any indication at all that tailings storage facility water is making it past the collection system,” he said.

ters, transactions on one of the new terminals ended up taking nearly nine months to show up on customers’ statements. Pickett said during a 90-day period from May through July, the particular register was not settling with accounts at the end of the night like the rest of terminals. “The one register didn’t cue up at the end of the evening, so basically it was just building up over time,” Pickett said.

Pickett said that while the processing company, Eigen, realized and corrected the issue with the problem register after 90 days, Eigen did not inform AC. “Unbeknownst to us, this problem was occurring,” he said.

Pickett said he did not know the number of customers, the number of transactions or the dollar amount involved in the delayed transactions.

Pickett said it was not until two weeks ago that AC became aware of the issue. It was also the time when the charges built up over the three months were finally processed and several AC customers got a rude surprise. Pickett said all the latent transactions were taken care of at once in early February.

In the interest of full disclosure, this reporter was one of the customers who visited the offending register. The charges for three different transactions appeared on this reporter’s statement on Feb. 5.

For Schobert the charges come at a time when her family is watching every penny. “I’ve resigned my position at the school and I’m now a student,” she said. “We watch our money tightly.”

Schobert said she learned of the issue through her bank, which she first called when she noticed the odd charges on her statement online. “My bank statement is online. I went to balance my checking account, and I see three or four charges,” she said.

Schobert said the bank, Wells Fargo, would work with her on the overdraft fees she incurred as a result of the charges. She did try to contest the charges to no avail.

Pickett said AC contacted the banks to let them know of the issue. “We did make an effort to contact the bank and credit unions. We did request from banks to waive overdraft fees,” he said. “They were very understanding with what happened.”

Loren Prosser, Wells Fargo’s Community Bank President for Northwest Alaska, said the bank is working with those affected. “We have seen some folks that have been affected,” he said. “We are working with folks on a case-by-case basis. Obviously we want to help people out when they’re dealing with hardship.”

Nome’s Credit Union 1 Manager John Baker said he has not yet worked with any members who have encountered difficulties. “We’re aware of the problem, and we’re willing to work with members if they’ve had some problems with fees. We understand how these things happen.”

While Prosser said Wells Fargo is willing to work with customers, he stresses the importance of regularly checking accounts to check for discrepancies. He said that while people are often quick to straighten things out if they are double charged for a transaction, they also need to display the same vigilance for omitted charges. “I think this instance really underscores the importance of going back and making sure that you were charged a correct amount,” he said.

Pickett from the AC said customers have been contacting the local store over the issue. “We have heard from quite a few customers,” Pickett said. “For the most part, customers have been very understanding. It’s unfortunate with the current economic situation.”

“The way for AC to have handled it better would have been to get on the radio and make an announcement to the community.”

– Lisa Schobert

He said the store is willing to go back over its records to show customers information from the transaction to verify that the charges are correct. Pickett said customers should first contact the local store with questions. “If they’re not satisfied with that contact, the store can direct them to the corporate office,” he said. Customers can contact the Nome AC store manager, Burt Teigen, at 443-2243.

Besides being angry over the lengthy delay, Schobert is upset that

AC did nothing to notify customers. “The way for AC to have handled it better would have been to get on the radio and make an announcement to the community,” Schobert said.

Pickett said the timing of the situation did not allow for the AC to post any warning through the newspaper or other media before the transactions went through. Nevertheless, two weeks have gone by since the charges appeared on customers’ accounts and AC has made no public announcement on the issue.

Pickett repeatedly called the issue “unfortunate.” He said AC has received assurances from the processing company, Eigen, that the problem will not reoccur. “We don’t want to lose the credibility with our customers,” he said.

For some customers, it may be too late.

“Have we shopped AC since we’ve found these charges? No,” Schobert said. “It will always be in the back of our minds, ‘Will this happen again?’” ate the Glacier Bay. In 2007 NSEDC owned 50 percent of GFC, which has harvested NSEDC's CDQ pollock and cod allocations since 1992.

The prior period income tax payment of $5.3 million shown on NSEDC's form 990 return for 2007 is part of NSEDC's $8.1 million payment to the IRS for back taxes, interest and penalties for the years 2005-2007.

Early in 2007 NSEDC officials began to discuss the possibility that some of the company's revenues may be subject to taxation as unrelated business income—income that is not substantially related to the purposes for which the company received nonprofit, tax-exempt status. In consultation with a Washington, D.C., tax attorney, NSEDC officials resolved the issue, filed amended returns for 2005-2007 and paid taxes, interest and penalties due for those years. The company also made quarterly tax payments as due in 2008.

The Nome Nugget recently obtained from NSEDC a copy of its 2007 Form 990 return to the Internal Revenue Service, which is open to public inspection.

As one of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Quota Program authorized under the federal Magnuson-Stevens Act, NSEDC is required to provide annual reports to its 15 member communities summarizing financial operations for the previous calendar year. Last month the company notified municipalities of the communities that its 2007 audit had been delayed but would be completed this month, after which the annual report will be issued.

Huge stock losses raise issues

The $5.2 million figure for unrealized losses on investments in 2007 is not as readily explained as NSEDC's tax payment, nor are the company's far greater losses in publicly traded securities in 2008. The enormous loss in investment portfolio value in the past two years is in stark contrast with dramatic growth of the portfolio from 2003 through 2006.

The losses raise a pressing question: Did members of the NSEDC board of directors act with diligence in July 2006 when they abruptly terminated the corporation's in-house investment manager Steve Rieger and dismantled the investment subsidiary he directed?

Rieger, who holds a master of business administration degree from Harvard University and is a former state senator, had managed NSEDC's investments in GFC and NSV and the firm's securities portfolio for several years. He was part of a management team headed by Eugene Asicksik, president and chief executive officer of NSEDC. The team had developed and maintained a conservative management and investment structure under the direction of a majority of the board. In July 2006, NSEDC had just reached the $100 million mark in net assets after doubling its worth in the preceding three and one-half years.

In October 2006 the NSEDC board stripped Asicksik of the presidency by voting to elect board chairman Dan Harrelson as president. The company's bylaws give all significant administrative powers and responsibilities to the president. Harrelson has a full-time job as Village Public Safety Officer in White Mountain, so he designated day-to-day management of the company to Asicksik as CEO, but Asicksik had little decision-making power or influence over company operations from October 2006 through December 2007 when he resigned from the corporation. His conservative approach to management no longer held sway.

In January 2007 the NSEDC board contracted with UBS Financial Services and Charles Schwab & Co. for management of its stock portfolio, dividing more than $50 million worth of securities between them. It was difficult to recruit a replacement for Rieger to manage NSEDC's other investments, but late in 2007 the corporation hired Dick Tremaine to handle its investments in GFC and other limited liability corporations.

Other factors in 2007

NSEDC's tax payment and investment losses in 2007 do not entirely account for the 64 percent drop in profits that year compared to 2006. NSEDC's 2007 revenues increased by $8.4 million to $34.1 million, compared to 2006 revenues of 25.7 million, but expenses also increased by $3.7 million to $17.8 million in 2007, compared to $14.1 million the previous year.

Included in the company's 2007 revenues were CDQ harvesting income of $15.2 million, $3.3 million in fishing and fish processing revenues, $3 million in dividends and interest from securities, $6.3 million from other investments including GFC and three other limited liability companies, and $5.8 million derived from a realized gain on investments.

harvests of crab and pollock late in the year or anticipated expenses for bills not yet received.

It was the best of times and the worst of times for NSEDC's finances in 2008. The best: In a transaction involving acquisition of the 376-foot C/V Alaska Ocean by Glacier Fish Co., NSEDC sold 12.5 percent of its interest in GFC to a new partner, Nissui USA. NSEDC now owns 37.5 percent of a company whose assets have greatly increased in value, so the value of NSEDC's investment in GFC also has increased greatly. In addition, Nissui made a one-time cash payment to NSEDC of about $13 million ($9 million after taxes).

The worst: NSEDC's securities investment managers were caught flat-footed by the housing mortgage crisis-stock market dive and reported every household in the region.

With all available information on revenues and expenses added and subtracted, NSEDC declared a preliminary gain of $13 million in net assets for 2008. Most of the increase was attributed to the one-time cash payment of ($9 million after taxes) that NSEDC received from the sale of 12.5 percent of its interest in GFC to Nissui USA.

What do you think?

What do you think of NSEDC's financial performance in the past two years compared to its performance from 2003 through 2006 and where do you think the company is headed in the future?

NSEDC's conservative management and investment policies prior to mid-2006 provided the company with resources to pay $10.3 million in Stiles bring to his new position as president and board chairman of Siu, which will manage assets worth $40 million or more, including NSEDC's ownership interest in Glacier Fish Co. and the Aleutian No. 1?

Stiles is Nome's long-time representative on the NSEDC board of directors. In July 2006 during a meeting closed to the public, he helped persuade the board to terminate Rieger's contract as NSEDC's investment manager and to dissolve the company's subsidiary, Norton Sound Investment Corp. At that time the board also abruptly fired Rocky Picinich, production manager for Norton Sound Seafood Products, a subsidiary of NSEDC.

Rieger, who was midway through a three-year contract with NSEDC when the board summarily terminated it, reportedly reviewed the board's action with an attorney, who reviewed the action with the board, which had NSEDC buy out the remainder of Rieger's contract at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars. And Picinich still is a familiar figure in Nome in summer months, going about his tasks for NSSP.

Is it a good idea to place someone who promotes rash decision-making in charge of a new investment subsidiary responsible for managing assets that took 16 years to build and that belong to every resident of the region? Is Stiles likely to manage NSEDC's investment subsidiary and its assets as competently as did Rieger?

When the Nugget asked Stiles in May of 2007 why the board had decided to dismantle NSIC, he replied in part: "NSIC, as a wholly owned LLC, was an entity overseen by a subset of the board that had control over NSEDC's investment assets. With the assets transferred back to NSEDC and the dissolution of NSIC, decisions concerning NSEDC's assets were back in the hands of the entire board and therefore the entire region." (The Nome Nugget, May 10, 2007, p. 10.)

Siu Alaska Corp, a wholly owned subsidiary of NSEDC, is an entity overseen by a subset of the board and four non-NSEDC affiliated directors hand-picked by the board that have control over a large percentage of NSEDC's investment assets. Decisions concerning these assets are to be made exclusively by these seven individuals and no one else in the region is to be informed of their deliberations or have any input whatever to their decisions.

The first meeting of the Siu board was held in Anchorage and was not advertised, it is not known whether the board has met since then, and Siu's attorney Margaret Russell has publicly stated that its board will make public only the documents it wants to make public. "It's a private for-profit corporation," she told Nome resident Tim Smith at an NSEDC board meeting last November in Nome.

Is that arrangement acceptable to you as a resident of a community represented by NSEDC in the federal CDQ program (and therefore as an owner of NSEDC)?

“Look at the national economy and 401(k)s and our losses are consistent”

– Dan Harrelson, NSEDC President/CEO

The latter figure matches the $5.8 million gain in net assets reported for 2007. Among all the income figures listed above, only the $6.3 million from other investments is taxable. It is noteworthy that no financial information about the Aleutian No. 1 appears in NSEDC's Form 990 return for 2007.

NSEDC's savings and temporary investments decreased from $17.1 million in 2006 to $6.2 million in 2007, while its investment in publicly traded securities increased from $55.1 million in 2006 to $69.4 million in 2007.

Compensation for the company's five most highly paid employees appears in its 2007 IRS return. Top full-time (45 hours per week) employees included Asicksik as CEO with compensation of $210,521 plus $36,728 in benefits. However, in January 2007 the NSEDC board approved an annual salary of $175,000 for Asicksik, so the compensation figure may include benefits such as accrued annual leave cashed in when he resigned.

Compensation is listed for other top full-time employees as follows: Janis Ivanoff, vice president, $104,995 in compensation, $29,865 in benefits; Jerry Ivanoff, corporate secretary and coordinator of Education, Employment and Training, $91,485 and $29,737; Jon Zuck, CDQ harvest manager, $229,742 and no benefits. Harrelson as president and board chairman received $94,750 in compensation, $1,902 in benefits and $5,563 in expenses for working 25 hours a week in 2007.

Major changes in 2008

NSEDC's board members received a draft annual financial statement for 2008 at their quarterly meeting last month in Nome. Figures did not include revenues due from losses that Harrelson called "atrocious."

Harrelson defended the percent reduction in NSEDC's security portfolio as comparable to that of the Alaska Permanent Fund. "Look at the national economy and 401(k)s and our losses are consistent," Harrelson said. Then he asked Jack Carpenter, at-large member of NSEDC's finance committee, for his opinion as someone who continually watches the stock market.

"At the November meeting I said UBS did not seem to prepare our investments for the recession," Carpenter replied. He suggested checking the investment managers' performances against guidelines the board had given them. Henry Ivanoff, at-large finance committee member and former NSEDC board chairman, said the board needs to look at changing the allocation of securities among the investment managers.

"We've already taken a semi-conservative approach to protect the principal and we need to sit down with them," Harrelson said.

Conflicting figures for a great increase in the value of NSEDC's GFC investment and for the greatly decreased value of the company's securities portfolio were presented at the meeting. The Nugget will obtain accurate information about these and other 2008 financial figures in written communication with the company. No figure for total revenues was stated aloud at the meeting.

In general, royalties from CDQ harvests decreased and income from assets such as GFC (which is taxable), increased. Anticipated expenses reportedly totaled about the same as in 2007. Atop those expenses were added unanticipated taxes and about $1.2 million for an energy subsidy for taxes, interest and penalties to the state and federal government for 2005-2007 and to continue to pay taxes on a portion of its income. The company also has withstood huge losses in its securities investments in the last two years.

In contrast, the head of another CDQ entity that faces UBIT issues said his company will be devastated if it must pay taxes on some of their investment income. (See "CDQ companies fish for tax protection" at www.adn.com/highliner.)

Although a balance sheet provides only a fraction of the information needed to evaluate a corporation's financial performance, NSEDC still looks like a big, complex and solid company that has become very valuable to its owners (the residents of its 15 member communities). It has a reliable, conservative, hard-working partner in GFC.

But do NSEDC's leaders possess the management and financial expertise to guide the company through this critical period of economic downturn and not lose the value it took 16 years to build? President and Board Chairman Harrelson, CEO Janis Ivanoff and newly appointed Chief Operating Officer Simon Kinneen comprise the company's top management team. Have they developed in consultation with the board a coherent strategic plan for the company's future?

A majority of NSEDC board members have indicated they do not understand the complexity of a new for-profit subsidiary, Siu Alaska Corp., which the NSEDC staff and a couple of board members have developed mostly in secrecy during the past year.

NPS teacher/administrative staff contracts set for approval

By Janet Ahmasuk

It was learned during the February 10, 2009 Nome School Board meeting that an important issue was on the agenda when Superintendent Luthi asked for the board's permission to move forward on contracts for 37 certified staff/tenured teachers and four administrator contracts for next year.

Contracts were granted to: Diana Adams, Nancy Bahnke, Jon Berkeley, Josephine Bourdon, Megan Brewer, Patrick Callahan, Annie Conger, Keith Conger, Corey Erickson, Lieudell Goldsberry, Sandra Harvey, Joy Hewitt, Todd Hindman, Ronald Horner, Colleen Johnson, Sandra Keller, Elizabeth Koreneck Johnson, Marrietta Lammer, Michelle Lean, Lisa Leeper, Krista Marvin, Burdette Moffit, Ian MacRae, Karen Mehl, Sharon Penttila, Lloyd Perrigo, Nicole Polk, Susan Rand, Vernon Rickett, Marie Saclamana, Rita Smith, Daniel Sullivan, Kelly Thrun, Nanci Tungwenuk, Andre Van Delden, Lisa Wehde, Dennis Welch and Richard Wolf.

Administrative contracts were approved for Janeen Sullivan, Douglas Boyer, Robin Johnson and Jon Wehde.

Other Action Items approved were Resolution/SES Services (Special Education) Title I grant, which has already been allocated for summer school program; Resolution in support of Senate Bill 57, a proposal to increase funding sources; FY10 NPS Calendar and E-Rate scope of work for FY10.

Other business included Student of the Month announcements: One January student was selected for junior high, and two were selected for senior high due to a tie situation in the selection process. Selected as January Student of the Month for the junior high was John Tocktoo, who was accompanied to the meeting by his grandfather Bert Tocktoo. He demonstrated good manners and volunteerism.

The January Senior High Student of the Month was Aubrey Verdin, a Cadet Major and a Battalion Commander/JROTC who worked six games as a radio broadcaster in one weekend. She is a strong caring student who also follows Rachel Challenge expectations.

The February Senior High Student of the Month was Darrel Tweet, who has a solid 4.0 academic record, is a great role model, takes education seriously and is a wonderful asset to the community. He takes EMT classes and has already responded to emergency calls.

Anvil City Science Academy announced that Nick Morgan was their Student of the Month.

The student report from Cori Eide, board student representative, included the following:

- The boys' basketball team recently had only home events except for the tournament held in Valdez this past weekend. The girls' basketball team is traveling every weekend until the regional tournament. They too were in Valdez this past weekend.

- The Junior Varsity tournament was held recently.

- Cheerleaders have been busy raising funds by hosting steak nights, replacing candy grams with nice Body Shop lotions from Terri Miller, and as a result they are out of debt.

The high school clubs are busy as usual:

- The BPA (Business Professional) hosted a spaghetti feed, and will be competing in Anchorage March 2-4; the Costa Rica Club is getting plans finalized; the Yearbook, after a slow start, is trying to recruit and is getting help with lay out.

- The JROTC is preparing for the annual inspection and training cadets for new positions.

- The Nome Native Youth Leadership members are getting to know their cultural backgrounds.

- The Juniors are trying to decide where to have the prom.

- The library hours situation has improved somewhat.

- Senior media class is starting to work on the senior slide show and also starting scholarship packets.

- Intramural free throw competition is still being held during lunch in the gym.

- Surveys were taken by the students for each teacher they had including administrators.

- Spirit Week is February 16-20. Eide and other students need to meet with student teachers and advisers on ways to handle and schedule all the meetings students are required to attend — some at the same time.

News from Anvil City Science Academy

The current student enrollment of ACSA is 44 students with six students on the waiting list.

The ACSA along with other charter schools throughout the state is lobbying for SB 57, which provides equitable funding for charter schools with a student population less than 150. This would provide NPS with additional funding. It is hoped that the Nome School Board will provide a letter of support for the lobbying effort.

Students have begun their work preparation for the Artists in Schools Program in May. ACSA is working with Ryan Conarro to create a theater performance that is a collection of monologues about people's experiences in Nome's historical events. The topics include: Alaska's Flag/Nome's role in statehood; Mushing in Nome (Serum Run, Iditarod, All Alaska Sweepstakes); Beltz Boarding School and the Molly Hooch decision; gold mining — the last 50 years; fishing in our region; the change in animal population — introducing musk ox, reindeer herding; airport/flight; Nome storms 2004 and 1974; King Islanders' relocation and Friendship Flight.

The students will also be doing research, including interviews, to find information about these topics.

Nome-Beltz Principal Janeen Sullivan's report included:

- Nome students will again be involved in the Kawerak Elder and Youth Conference coming up shortly.

- Applications for scholarships for the Alaska Native Science and Engineering Program will be available soon.

- There is still a vacancy in the Native Programs Library position.

- Academic testing for the TerraNova exam, National Assessment of Educational Progress (NEAP), and MAP Measures of Academic Progress will place all through the month of February for the seventh and eighth grades.

- Forty-four students grades 7-12 were recognized for perfect attendance - no tardies/absences - for the month of January. Qualifying students received a $5 gift card to Airport Pizza.

- Cori Eide, student representative to the board, has been doing an excellent job of covering student activities.

Notes from Nome Elementary School Principal Carl White:

- The Battle of the Books competition has finished. All of the students did well.

- NES will have a special assembly February 26 at 1:15 p.m. Norton Sound Health Corporation's CAMP Department is providing the motivational speakers, "Rick and Mick." They are twin brothers who have diabetes. They use music and humor in the motivational presentations.

- Every Monday 12 students from ACSA are helping the kindergarten and 1st grade students for about 30 minutes. They are working under the direction of the classroom teachers. This is a great opportunity for these students to give back to our community.

- The Second Quarter Perfect Attendance assembly was held where 65 students out of a current enrollment of 334 students were recognized for perfect attendance. Their names are listed in the February 2009 NES Wolverine Wire. That's 10 more students when compared to the first quarter. Students and parents are to be commended for their efforts.

- MAP testing ended February 6 - the test helps teachers assess progress of students and lets teachers know modifications that need to be made. Parents will receive assessment results from this testing at the Parent Teacher Conference in March.

The Director of Northwestern Career and Technical Center, Jeff Selvey, announced a newly created position of Distance Learning.

Fifteen NACTEC students participated in the recent Career Fair.

Next year NACTEC will start their seventh year and will welcome comments from the public.

Maintenance Director Ike Ozenna-told tales of the recent bad storm day and how busy they were. He also announced that one janitor has resigned.

Assistant Superintendent Jon Wehde reported that he is working on a grant with Nome Eskimo Community-Alaska Native Education Grant/a federal grant. The grant, if successful, will be worth a half million per year for each of three years.

Superintendent Luthi's report highlights

The recent meeting with Bering Strait School District (BSSD) in Teller went exceptionally well.

Superintendent Jim Hickerson of BSSD is planning to share with legislators in Juneau the new process of collaboration that has begun between BSSD and the Nome School District.

Jennifer Reader compiled 29 pages of staff comments that they shared. Superintendent Luthi will share those comments by e-mail with the entire staff.

Superintendent Luthi has met with the entire staff both at Nome-Beltz and NES to go over the financial picture of the district and has talked openly and very frankly to the NPS staff about what the financial picture is for the next year. He has also spoken to the NES staff recently about filling the NES Principal position. Carl White has announced his retirement. Luthi has asked the elementary staff to recommend two certified, one classified and two community members to serve on the "Principal Interview" committee.

Supertendent Luthi is preparing to speak to the next City Council meeting concerning NPS's projected financial picture for next year. He will be presenting the projected revenue and expenses. The City of Nome has been very cooperative, and continuation of the positive relationship will be beneficial.

The Board met in executive session following the regular meeting.

NOME CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT & NOME EDUCATION ASSOCIATION NEGOTIATIONS

At a meeting held Wednesday, February 11, 2009 initial proposals were exchanged by the Nome Board of Education and the Nome Education Association.

Pursuant to Alaska Statute Section 23.40.235 "the public shall be provided the opportunity to comment on the Initial Proposals."

Copies of both Nome City School District and the Education Association's initial proposals are available for review at the NPS District Office. OUT OF THE FOG AND IN FOR THE WIN—Nick Olstad, front left, and Todd Minnick, front right, power across a ceremonial downtown finish line to claim a victory in the 2009 Tesoro Iron Dog last Saturday afternoon on the Chena River. Waving the checkered flag in the foreground is Olstad's wife, Bri Olstad. Following Olstad and Minnick are second-place finishers Tyler Aklestad and Tyson Johnson.

By Tim Mowry
Fairbanks Daily News Miner

When he saw Tyler Aklestad's body sprawled on the Tanana River ice on Saturday, Todd Minnick prepared to do what any Tesoro Iron Dog racer would do—stop and help.

It didn't matter that Aklestad and Minnick were battling for the lead of the world's longest snowmachine race only 100 miles from the finish line and were separated by only a matter of seconds after almost 1,900 miles of racing.

If a fellow Iron Dogger is in trouble, you stop, even if the title is on the line.

"I seen Tyler laying on the ice, and I turned to go over there to see if he was OK," Minnick said.

The next thing he knew, Minnick and his snowmachine were cart-wheeling down the river, having hit the same three-foot wind drift Aklestad did. He landed on the frozen ice not far from Aklestad.

"There we were, both laid out on the river," Minnick said.

Like two boxers who each landed a big punch and went down at the same time, Minnick and Aklestad pulled themselves up off the ice for one final effort that will go down as one of the most exciting Iron Dog finishes in the 25-year history of the race.

Riding a pair of Polaris Dragons, Minnick, 29, and Nick Olstad, 23, held on to win the Iron Dog in record time, edging the Ski-Doo team of Aklestad and Tyson Johnson by just 3 minutes, 18 seconds.

Their time of 37 hours, 19 minutes, and 8 seconds across the 1,971-mile trail shattered the previous course record of 38:07:57.

"We finally did it," Minnick said, accepting a victory hug from Wasilla friend Gov. Sarah Palin, who was at the Chena River finish line in downtown Fairbanks waiting for her husband, Todd, who finished in sixth place with partner Scott Davis.

It was Minnick's first Iron Dog win in 10 tries, while Olstad, also of Wasilla, earned his second Iron Dog crown. The victory, worth $25,000 of the $160,000 purse, also broke a four-year reign by Arctic Cat racers. The last time a pair of Polaris riders claimed top Iron Dog honors was 2001.

"We rode 'em hard," Minnick said of the black, red and white 600cc Polaris Dragons he and Olstad drove to victory.

More than half of the windshield on Minnick's machine was missing as a result of his crash between Manley and Nenana.

"It was pretty pristine before that," Minnick said of his sled.

Davis, who with Palin set the previous course record in 2007, wasn't surprised to see the record fall. Trail conditions were near-perfect this year with a layer of fresh snow cushioning the trail the entire way.

"I've never seen it that fast," said Davis, who finished almost four hours behind.

Minnick and Olstad were the second team to leave the starting line and led the race almost from wire to wire. They took the lead about five miles from the starting line and held it for the next 1,700 miles. They led Aklestad and Johnson by 38 minutes at the halfway point in Nome.

"There was a lot of pressure leading the whole time," Minnick acknowledged. "We couldn't slack off at all."

After impressive debut, Morgan says he'll be back for more

By Tim Mowry
Fairbanks Daily News Miner

Rookie Iron Dog racer Mike Morgan of Nome had a "good ride" in the world's longest snowmachine race and he plans to return next year in hopes of having a better one.

Morgan, 23, teamed with Tyler Huntington of Fairbanks to finish fifth in the 1,971-mile race from Big Lake to Nome to Fairbanks, the highest finish of any Seward Peninsula racer.

"It was interesting," Morgan said of his first Iron Dog experience. "I had a good ride. It was fun while it lasted."

The Wasilla team of Todd Minnick and Nick Olstad won the race in a record time of 37 hours, 19 minutes and 8 seconds. Morgan and Huntington finished more than 2 1/2 hours behind the leaders with a time of 39:57:46.

If there's one thing Morgan learned in his first Iron Dog, it's that every minute counts.

"You've gotta run flawless to run with Minnick and Olstad and those guys," said Morgan, a welder and heavy equipment operator for AMI Construction. "It's hard to make up time on those guys because they run so clean."

Riding Polaris Dragons similar to the ones Minnick and Olstad rode to victory, Morgan and Huntington finished only five minutes behind the fourth-place team of Eric Quam and Brad Helwig.

Huntington and Morgan actually caught up to Quam and Helwig about 10 miles from Nenana, but Huntington ran out of gas and had to stop. The same thing happened on Friday after Huntington and Morgan passed Quam and Helwig on the way to Tanana.

"It's kind of a heartbreaker," said the 23-year-old Huntington, "I'm a little disappointed."

Said a similarly disappointed Morgan, "We should have had fourth."

Other than burning too much fuel, the only other mechanical problems the two racers had were with blown exhaust pipes, Morgan said. Both he and Huntington blew an exhaust pipe on the way to Nome, which cost them valuable time.

Morgan said he intends to race the Iron Dog again next year after getting a taste of success as a rookie.

"I'll be out there," he said.

He'll have to find a new partner, though, as Huntington announced after the race that he is taking a few years off after three straight top seven finishes.

Morgan said he might try to lure former champ Evan Booth, the only Nomeite to ever win the Iron Dog, out of retirement.

"I'm pretty close to Evan," he said. "I'm sure I could talk him into something."

It wasn't until Thursday and the 120-mile run from Ruby to Tanana on the Yukon River that Aklestad and Johnson, who had been slowly closing the gap on Minnick and Olstad, caught up and passed them briefly.

Only 1 minute, 42 seconds separated the two teams when they left Tanana on Saturday for the final 232 miles to the finish in Fairbanks.

Minnick and Olstad maintained their slim lead for the first 100 miles, then Aklestad and Johnson caught and passed them about 30 miles out of Manley while Olstad was stopped.

Minnick and Olstad re-took the lead after both Aklestad and Minnick crashed. Aklestad hit the snow drift first, and he was traveling faster than Minnick. Aklestad estimated he was traveling about 80 mph when he hit what he described as "a really bad wind drift on an open section of trail that I hit way too hard."

Aklestad's Ski-Doo landed upright on its back end, and the impact stretched his track out, he said. After that, the track was "bubbling up" at high speeds, forcing Aklestad and Johnson to back off, Aklestad said.

Even so, Aklestad and Johnson managed to re-take the lead when Olstad was forced to briefly stop again.

But Minnick and Olstad caught up and passed them about 25 miles from Nenana and led into the final fuel stop. They left Nenana a minute ahead of Aklestad and Johnson and managed to stretch their lead by another two minutes en route to Fairbanks.

"We pushed as hard as we could, but we couldn't catch them," Johnson said. "Our only hope was that they blew a belt or something."

Even when Aklestad and Johnson passed them on Friday and again on Saturday, Minnick said he and Olstad never panicked.

"We knew our machines were faster on top-end speed, and that's how it worked out," Minnick said.

For the soft-spoken Olstad, it was his second Iron Dog victory. He won with Marc McKenna as a rookie in 2005. Olstad has finished the race twice in five tries, both times as a champion, but he seemed happier for Minnick than himself.

"I'm glad Todd could get one," Olstad said.

For the snake-bitten duo of Aklestad, 23, and Johnson, 29, it was their second runner-up finish in three years. They placed second in 2007, too, the only other year of the five they raced together that they finished the race. They did everything they could to win, Johnson said.

"Any other year, we probably would have been hours ahead if it wasn't for those guys," Johnson said of Minnick and Olstad. "We pushed it as hard as we could."

Mother Nature throttles Iron Doggers on their way out of Nome

By Tyler Rhodes

While most of the Tesoro Iron Dog racers roared into Nome under clear skies—whether that meant sunshine or starts—the weather gods did not smile upon them so favorably for their exit from the Gold Rush City.

Riders staging at the ramp next to Subway last Thursday were greeted with a biting wind and snow that helped blur the line between the snow and the horizon. The flat light also concealed snowdrifts and other obstacles, leading to several crashes that bumped many from the race and sent a few to the hospital.

Around 3:45 p.m. last Thursday, the Nome Volunteer Fire Department received a call of a snowmachine accident approximately 20 miles east of Nome. The initial report was of an Iron Dog racer on the ice who was paralyzed. That was right about the time Nome racer Jimmy “Tre” West III should have been passing that point.

The call-out over Jimmy West Jr.’s fire department pagers had to put a lump in his throat, as he had just watched his son blast off the stat line only a half hour earlier. Still, West Jr. said he just focused on the task at hand and rode out to the scene to assist.

While the weather didn’t abate, the picture of the incident became clearer over the next few minutes. The injured racer was Jeff Pelkola from Galena. Assistant Fire Chief Jerry Steiger said search and rescue personnel were able to get to Pelkola, stabilize him and move him to a nearby cabin to warm up. “He hit a drift on the other side of Cape Nome on the trail that’s part of the road there,” Steiger said. “He hit a 3-foot drift or so and launched himself. From there he proceeded to come down pretty severely on his back.”

Pelkola was eventually transported back to Nome in Bering Straits Native Corp.’s tracked vehicle. Steiger said he arrived back in Nome around 6:30 p.m. Pelkola was later reportedly moving around on his own in Nome after suffering an injury to his vertebrae, according to other media reports.

While they escaped unscathed, the weather was enough to force team No. 1 of James Sweetsir and Mark Tope out of the race. The duo came to the aid of Pelkola, stayed with him after his crash and ended up returning to Nome that evening to wait out the weather. With no abatement in the storm and the clock still ticking, the duo eventually scratched.

Near the same time the call for Pelkola came in, racer Unch Schuerch of Kiana was making his way back to Nome on his own. Schuerch was able to ride to the hospital on his own, nursing cracked ribs.

Nome wasn’t the only area to claim horrible weather on Thursday. Team No. 5 of Bill Wilkes and Wayne Wold were nearly to Koyuk when Wold reportedly broke his collarbone, yet another victim of a snowdrift.

OUTTA HERE—Tre West and Peter Reich Sr. head into the storm and out of Nome last Thursday. The duo managed to escape injury as several teams around them crashed in the near zero-visibility weather. The team did, however, have headaches with mechanical issues, slowing them in their quest for the finish line in Fairbanks.

As the storm wreaked havoc among his fellow competitors, Tre West said the lack of visibility was a familiar sight. “Leaving Nome was normal, nothing new for me anyways,” West said. “It slowed everybody else down, which was kind of nice.”

If it wasn’t the weather that was punishing West and partner Peter Reich Sr. of Kotzebue, it was mechanical problems. West reported troubles with everything from broken shocks to fried head gaskets and heat exchangers. Despite the troubles, he and Reich made it to Fairbanks to the finish—even as West’s machine limped along on one cylinder.

“I’ll be back next year,” West said. “It was kind of a hectic race, but we got through it.”

Nome boys outgunned by 4A teams at Valdez tourney

The strength of two class 4A teams proved too much for Nome’s boys basketball team over the weekend as the Nanooks came home with a 1-3 record from the Valdez Elks Tournament.

In the opening match of the tourney last Thursday, Palmer overpowered Nome from the start, holding the Nanooks to just five points in the first quarter. Nome fought back to within three points of Palmer in the second half, but fell in the end 60-49. Despite the loss, Nome’s Jeremy Head reached a milestone, scoring his 1,000th career point as a Nanook. Head finished the game with 17 points. Jesse Blandford led Nome with 19, 16 of which were scored in the second half of the game.

Both Head and Blandford were named to the all-tournament team.

The Nanooks came out on top in Friday’s action, beating Cordova 58-41. Blandford again scored 19 while Head, Derek Weiler and Christian Leckband each added 9 points for Nome.

Nome finished the tourney on Saturday with a narrow loss to class 4A Lathrop 66-64. The loss put the Nanooks’ season record at 15-4.

Barrow took home first-place honors for the tournament followed by Hutchison and Palmer.

Nome will host Bethel this Friday and Saturday. The varsity games will be played at 7 p.m. on Friday and 4:30 p.m. on Saturday. Junior varsity games will be held at 5:30 p.m. Friday and 3 p.m. on Saturday. Intrasquad junior high girls games will be held at 4:15 p.m. on Friday and 2:45 p.m. on Saturday. All games are at Nome-Beltz High School.

Lady Nanooks go 1-2 on the road

The Lady Nanooks emerged from the Valdez Elks basketball tournament last weekend with one win under its belt and a pair of losses.

Nome faced class 4A Palmer—the eventual tournament champion—in the first game of the tournament last Thursday. Palmer handily won the game 44-27.

The Lady Nanooks rebounded Friday with a convincing 54-31 win against Hutchison. Vanessa Tahbone led Nome with a whopping 29 points. Tahbone was named to the all-tournament team.

Nome’s last game of the tourney was against a familiar opponent. Barrow again held the upper hand over the Lady Nanooks with a win. The final score was not available. Nome’s record fell to 11-7 with the loss.

The Lady Nanooks will next travel to Bethel on Friday and Saturday for a two-game set with the Lady Warriors.

Joan Lowy/The Associated Press
WASHINGTON - When the Beal Mountain mine opened in 1988 near Butte, Mont., its owner promoted open-pit cyanide leaching for extracting gold from ore as modern and environmentally friendly.

Pegasus Gold Corp., a Canadian company, extracted nearly 460,000 ounces of gold over a decade before closing the mine and declaring bankruptcy in 1998.

It left behind a 70-acre, cyanide-contaminated leach pond with a leaky liner and tons of rubble that sends selenium-laced runoff into streams, threatening cutthroat trout and other fish. The $6.2 million reclamation bond posted by the company doesn't come close to covering the full cost to clean up the mine, which could total nearly $40 million.

"There is a real ticking time bomb up there," said Josh Vincent, president of a Trout Unlimited chapter near the mine, which sits on U.S. Forest Service land.

Efforts to clean up one of the West's most enduring and dangerous legacies - tens of thousands of abandoned hardrock mines, many dating to the 19th century - should get a boost from the economic stimulus bill awaiting President Barack Obama's signature.

The final bill, approved by the House and Senate on Friday, contains more than $1.5 billion for construction and maintenance projects in the Bureau of Land Management, the National Park Service and the Forest

Advocates for cleaning up abandoned mines say the work is a strong job-generator.

"These much-needed funds will create thousands of jobs, reduce Service. That includes addressing pollution and safety hazards caused by abandoned mines on public lands.

The three agencies together spent about $25 million on mine cleanup in the budget year that ended last Sept. 30, according to the staff of Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., one of the lawmakers who sought the money.

Projects ranging from repairing trails to replacing equipment also are eligible for the money, so there is no guarantee the money will be spent on mine cleanup. The bill says preference is supposed to go to projects that generate most jobs.

water pollution, eliminate public safety threats, and restore fish and wildlife habitat in rural communities across the country," said Lauren Pagel, policy director for Earthworks, an environmental group focused on mining issues.

The Government Accountability Office estimates there are at least 161,000 abandoned hardrock mines in Alaska and 11 other western states, plus South Dakota. Open mine shafts and decaying structures pose safety hazards, contaminants are polluting streams and groundwater, and piles of tailings tinged with arsenic have been left behind.

In the Pacific Northwest, according to the report, Washington has 3,629 mine sites, 1,608 unsafe features and 50 sites with environmental degradation. Oregon has 3,823 mine sites, no available figures on unsafe features and 140 degraded sites. Idaho has 7,100 mine sites with no available figures on unsafe features or degradation, and Alaska has 469 mine sites with 235 unsafe features and 99 degraded sites.

The Environmental Protection Agency estimates it could cost as much as $50 billion to clean up all the nation's abandoned hardrock mines.

Anti-tax groups questioned whether mine clean up merits funds at all, considering that the bill is intended to jump-start the economy. Cleanups are temporary and unlikely to have any lasting economic effect, said Pete Sepp, a spokesman for the National Taxpayers Union, which advocates for less government spending.

"It's not like anyone is going to dig in these mines ever again," he said.

A report last year by the Interior Department's inspector general said abandoned mines on BLM and National Park Service land are exposing people to dangerous contaminants such as arsenic, lead and mercury. Other dangers include deadly gases, collapsing mine walls and explosive chemicals.

Among the dangers outlined in the report: all-terrain vehicle riders falling into abandoned mine shafts.

In 2007, a 13-year-old girl was killed and her 10-year-old sister seriously injured when the all-terrain vehicle they were riding ran off a trail and fell into a 125-foot mine shaft a short distance from a BLM campground near Chloride, Ariz.

At the Mojave National Preserve in California, investigators found mine shafts along roads that were large enough to swallow cars.

"The potential for more deaths and injuries is ominous," the report said.

Each week The Nome Nugget gathers hundreds of photos—everything from scenic landscape shots to the local high school basketball games. We only have so many pages in the paper to print photos, but there's plenty of room on the web. Check out www.nomenugget.net to get a look at all the shots we took over the last few weeks. If you see something you like, you can order prints, photo mugs and even T-shirts!

HOBOSCOPES

February 19 - 25, 2009

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 19

Love is in the air. Be creative and get the home fires burning, Capricorn. A message from an old buddy piques your interest in a cause.

ARIES
March 21-April 19

Ooh-la-la, Aries. Passion ignites at home, and passion relationship sizzles. Make the most of the moment. Personal values must soon be reevaluated and amendments made.

CANCER
June 22-July 22

The magic is back, Cancer. Love heats up, and passion burns bright. A new face turns everyone's life at work upside down, and that's not necessarily a bad thing.

LIBRA
September 23-October 22

Everything is not as it seems, Libra. Take a step back and see the situation for what it truly is. You might be surprised by what you discover.

AQUARIUS
January 20-February 18

Risks pay off big this week, Aquarius. Celebrate with that special someone. A home repair deserves your full attention and careful consideration.

TAURUS
April 20-May 20

Excellent, Taurus. Your gift scores with that special someone. A calming influence invades the workplace, and peace reigns. Use the time to get ahead.

LEO
July 23-August 22

Pish-posh, Leo. You can and will do it. Throw away your reservations and get crackin'. There is more than one way to express your love at home.

SCORPIO
October 23-November 21

Pandemonium breaks out at home, Scorpio. Not to worry. All of the fuss will make the big event that much more special. Travel is on the agenda for the weekend.

PISCES
February 19-March 20

Nothing means more to you than family, Pisces, and this is the week to make that known. Rearrange your schedule and spend some quality time with your loved ones.

GEMINI
May 21-June 21

Victory is yours this week, Gemini. There is nothing you cannot do. A wish is granted for a dear friend, and a small package tops off the weekend.

VIRGO
August 23-September 22

Va-va-voom, Virgo. That new do is you. Don't think twice about going for it. Riches are not always monetary, as you're about to learn with that special someone.

SAGITTARIUS
November 22-December 21

Love knows no bounds. Nowhere will that be more evident than at home this week, Sagittarius. Be grateful for what you've got. A phone call points you in a new direction.

Trooper Beat

On January 28, at approximately 8 p.m. the Alaska State Troopers received a report of a single vehicle roll over at 3.4 mile Beam Road. The investigation revealed that Allison Wrenn, 26, of Nome was traveling southbound on the Beam Road when she encountered a vehicle driving northbound in the center of the road. Wrenn swerved to avoid the oncoming vehicle and lost control of her vehicle. No injuries were reported. Wrenn was wearing her seatbelt.

On February 3, at 4:30 p.m. and February 4, at 6:30 p.m., Elliot Olanna, whose drivers license is suspended, was seen driving a dark blue Ford pickup truck in the village of Teller. Charges pending against Olanna, 33, of Teller, for two counts of Driving While License Suspended.

On February 7, at 10:00 a.m., the AST contacted a 14-year old female juvenile at a Nome residence during a felony probation check. The juvenile was subsequently charged with Minor Consuming Alcohol and released a parent.

On February 8, Unalakleet AST received a report of a snowmachine being vandalized in St. Michael. A juvenile suspect has been identified and a report will be forwarded to Juvenile Probation.

On February 8, at approximately 8 p.m. the AST received a report that Charlene Keehn, 54, of Nome had been caught in overflow approximately 30 miles out of Nome and needed assistance. A hasty team was sent out and located Keehn. Keehn was brought back to Nome. No injuries were reported.

On February 10, at 12:11 a.m., the AST received a report of two overdue hunters in Gambell. A search team was dispatched and located Benjamin Apassingok, 25, of Gambell, and Bryant Koonooka, 35, of Gambell, a short time later returning to the village. Both travelers were reported to be in good condition.

On February 10, Unalakleet AST received a report of an assault in St. Michael. Investigation revealed a 14-year-old juvenile and a 32-year-old male were involved in a physical altercation. No alcohol was involved. The juvenile was treated at the St. Michael Clinic; the adult did not require medical attention. AST investigation is continuing.

On February 12, at approximately 4 p.m. the AST received a report of a snowmachine crash 20 miles east of Nome, on the Iron Dog trail. Nome Volunteer Fire Department responded in a blowing ground storm. Jeff Pelkola, 42, of Galena, from Iron Dog team # 26 was transported to Norton Sound Regional Hospital for treatment of his injuries sustained in the crash.

Obituaries

Thelma Komok

Thelma Komok was born July 23, 1922 at Tuksuk Channel to Jimmy and Ruby Okleasik. After a long-hard battle with many illnesses, Thelma died peacefully, with family by her side, on February 4. She married long-time companion John Earl Komok on March 21, 1941 at Mary's Igloo. In August 1941 they had twins Martin and James, then in June of 1942, they had Gilbert. In 1966, they adopted their daughter Rhonda. They made their lives at Mary's Igloo and Tuksuk River. Thelma was very prosperous in her life-time, sewing, beading, knitting, crocheting, picking berries, picking greens, storing food that John Earl provided for the long winters, and most of all, spending quality time at Mary's Igloo, American River, tunu, Tuksuk and Kawerak. Thelma was well known for her parkas made out of skins, mukluks, and knitted hats that she provided for many families and friends all over the state of Alaska.

In the winter of 1972, they moved to the Village of Teller so that Rhonda could go school. In 1979 they welcomed son Jason Wade into the family. Thelma was a very caring and considerate person and was well respected. She raised her grandchildren, Maggie Arlene, Kyle Brandon and was very excited when Pupik and Rudy gave birth to her first great-grandson John Earl Komok, whom she named after her late husband John Earl.

Thelma had many fond memories of up the river and the time she spent with family and good friends. In her older years she spent time at home in Teller. In the spring and summer she would sit on the porch and enjoy the weather.

Thelma is survived by her daughter Rhonda Komok, son Jason Tendler, grandchildren but raised as her own Maggie and Kyle Komok, sister Clara Topkok, grandchildren Logan Reed, Cheyenne Rae, Travis Jon and Joseph John; great-grandchildren John Earl, Jeston Trevor, Brandon James, Makayla Jaylen and Talisa Margaret; and son-in-law Joseph P. Delgado.

Thelma was proceeded in death by her husband John Earl; sons Martin, James and Gilbert Komok; her parents Jimmy and Ruby Okleasik; granddaughter BriAnne Dawn Delgado, brothers Martin, Fred, Ost, Carl, Vincent and Isaac Okleasik, Sr. sisters Hazel, Rachel, Madelon, and Katie, son-in-law Patrick "Rudy" Pushruk, good friends Molly Seetot, Elsie Ball, Annie Green and Daisy Jack and many nieces nephews and friends.

Ruth Elvira Martin

Seward resident, Mrs. Ruth Elvira Martin, 84, died February 6, from chronic heart failure at her home in Seward.

Memorial services will be held at

Ruth Elvira Martin

2:00 p.m., Saturday, May 2, 2009 at the First Evangelical Covenant Church, 1145 C Street in Anchorage. Pastor Nathan Toots will officiate. A memorial potluck will immediately follow the services at the church. Mrs. Martin's ashes will be buried next to her mother in the Nome Cemetery.

Mrs. Martin was born February 16, 1924 to Julius and Elvira (Oomigikjoak) Pleasant in Elim. She graduated from high school and moved to Nome in 1960 where she worked as a matron for the city jail until 1965. Mrs. Martin moved to Seattle in 1966 where she worked as a dietician at the Swedish Medical Center until 1989 where she retired. She also received an attendance award at the Swedish Medical Center for 35 years of service. She moved to Seward in 1998 where she has resided ever since.

Ruth died peacefully in the arms of her only son, Bruce. She was a loving mother who will be missed by family and friends.

She was preceded in death by her parents, Julius and Elvira Pleasant; brothers, Gabriel and Joseph Pleasant; sisters, Easter Moses, Alma Pauwak and Flora Pleasant. She is survived by her daughters, Ida E. Aukon of Elim, Carol Meyers of Mountain Village; son Bruce E. Martin of Seward; and sister Lena Blatchford of Anchorage.

Memorial contributions may be made to the family C/O Bruce Martin, P.O. Box 1838, Seward, AK 99664.

Arrangements were by Peninsula Memorial Chapel.

A miracle on Newton

Six survive crash in whiteout conditions

By Tyler Rhodes

Johne "Candy" Seetot had just glanced out the airplane window last Thursday afternoon to see what appeared to be the Snake River below—the only discernable thing in an otherwise sea of white—before she leaned her head against the window and dozed off.

When Seetot violently awoke, she found herself thrown into the seat in front of her, her head was hurting and the plane was on the ground. Her seatbelt remained buckled in the seat now behind her; somehow she slipped out of the restraint. "I started asking what happened. We were in the snow," Seetot said.

What had happened many would later describe as a miracle. Seetot, her fellow four passengers and the pilot of Frontier Alaska flight 8218 from Brevig Mission had all survived after the Piper PA-31-350 flew into the side of Newton Peak just northeast of Nome.

The crash occurred in whiteout conditions shortly before 6:30 p.m. Feb. 19. While Seetot was asleep when they hit the mountain, other passengers reported seeing nothing nor having any indication that the plane was going down before impact. The flight was a regularly scheduled trip for Frontier and was piloted by Harland Hannon of Nome.

ROUGH LANDING—Frontier Alaska flight 8218 sits amazingly intact on the side of Newton Peak Friday after crashing into the mountain in whiteout conditions the evening before. After an approximate three-hour search, all six occupants of the plane were found alive and transported to Nome. Two passengers were hospitalized.

National Transportation Safety Board Investigator Clint Johnson said Hannon reported no mechanical issues with the plane. Johnson said

Hannon told him he descended about 10 miles out of Nome due to deteriorating weather. After getting permission to land under special visual flight rules, due to the weather conditions, Hannon put his landing gear

Fire claims four lives in White Mountain

By Tyler Rhodes

A house fire in White Mountain claimed the lives of four of the village's residents Friday.

According to Alaska State Troopers, Josephine Lincoln, 71, Frank Ok-soktaruk, 51, Dean Lincoln, 43, and Patrick Lincoln, 24, died as a result of the fire at the Lincoln residence.

Village Public Safety Officer Dan Harrelson was at home, just a few hundred feet away from the Lincoln house, when just after 11 p.m. 13-year-old Tiffany Lincoln came running in with the news that her house was on fire.

Harrelson, who had a couple friends over, sprang to his feet. "Just as long as it took me to put my snowpants on we were out the door," he said. They arrived to find the front, and only door locked. Using a maul, Harrelson was able to break the knob and access the arctic entryway. He was forced to use the maul again to break open the locked door that led to the home's interior. At that point, it was clear that entering the house was not an option. "Once we got the second door opened, plumes of black smoke poured out," he said. "It was like an oven on broil, trying to go in."

Harrelson said he could see down low where there was about a foot of clearance between the smoke and the floor. There were no signs of people in the hallway. "I think when we first responded, whoever was in the house had already perished," he said.

Still, Harrelson, his friends, the volunteer fire department and nearly the entire community went right to work to put the fire out. Harrelson said the town's fire truck had mechanical issues and the deep snow added to the difficulty of getting equipment to the blaze. Harrelson's friends went to the fire hydrant located about a quarter of a mile from the house and started running a hose.

Harrelson said when he couldn't get inside the house he went around the back where he saw flames shooting out of a window. "It spread very

Lake resigns as hospital CEO

By Tyler Rhodes

Just as his one-year contract was set to expire, Michael Lake has resigned from his position as president and chief executive officer of Norton Sound Health Corp. Monday.

The health corporation announced the resignation in a brief press release issued Tuesday. Carol Piscoya, who has worked for NSHC for six years, has been appointed interim president and CEO. Most recently Piscoya has served as vice president of Community Health Services.

According to NSHC's general counsel, Rick Helms, Lake gave no reason for his resignation in a letter written to the corporation's board of directors. Helms said a meeting

Letters

Hello,

Profit or nonprofit, your job as Board of Directors/Members is to inform/notify the general public of the day-to-day activities/operations of NSEDC. NSEDC was formed by the idea of a man who loved and cared for the Alaska Native peoples. Those of you who were there when NSEDC was born know who this man is.

How the heck can the ignorance are greediness of those on the Board of Directors/Members get as far as it has come today? Is that what NSEDC has become? A bunch of unsure, insecure people who would rather point their fingers at each other, trying to clear themselves?

Realize it or not the USA is in trouble. We probably won't feel "the crunch" till later. As it is, we pay outrageous prices for gas, stove oil, groceries, and it's not getting any better.

The "bumps" that used to be easily straightened out a long time ago, that's just it, days gone by, these "bumps" are here, they're big, they deserve attention. A physician would tell you if your child got bonked on the head, "Keep him/her awake a few hours," to make sure they did not die.

I for one can see the ignorance of the "imports" who have nothing better to do than rattle a few cages, sit back and have a good laugh about it. Aside from all the hatred, it doesn't matter what color skin you're in, we all have red blood flowing through our veins. I hope all is well with you and yours.

Practice Pays Off

The hours of planning and coordinating practice sessions, mock disasters drills and training exercises can be a major inconvenience and take a lot of precious hours. Some would rather spend the time relaxing at home with their family. The sacrifice pays off.

Nome's emergency service got put to the test last week and came out with flying colors. They made us proud. A plane crash on the mountainside just outside of town with all surviving with no major injuries brought wide smiles to the faces of all who were involved in the rescue effort. All of our rescue agencies worked together flawlessly like a well-oiled machine. The Nome police, State Troopers, Nome Fire Department Search and Rescue and Ambulance volunteers, Norton Sound Regional Hospital personnel, the Federal Aviation Administration, the radio communications folks, the skilled pilot and level-headed passengers brought a positive outcome to a potential disaster.

Training, drill sessions, continuing education and interagency coordination takes time and effort but are so very important in making Nome such a great community. We are proud of our well-trained volunteers and dedicated professionals. Thanks for the job well done.

UP, UP AND AWAY — Shane Smithhisler puts some loft on the snow being blown out of the area behind the Rec Center last week.

Storm delivers record snowfall:
Last Wednesday's bounty the third biggest February snow day in history

It probably comes to no surprise to most Nomeites who were digging out their cars and tunneling their way to their front doors last week that Nome set a snowfall record last Wednesday.

The 8.2 inches of white stuff that came down Feb. 18 easily topped the previous record of 5 inches set in 1918. The day also earned the distinction of being the third snowiest February day on record, edging out a 7.9 accumulation set Feb. 3, 1975. The top two snowiest days on record for February in Nome are 9.3 inches on Feb. 12, 2005 and the 14 inches that blanketed Nome Feb. 19, 1920.

TIME TO GET SMART — Get out your furs, stay warm and breeze through all the blizzards. For thousands of years, the Eskimos have survived the long, cold Arctic winters by living off the bounty of the land and sea for food as well as for clothing. Wolverine and wolf ruffs, squirrel fur parkas, reindeer mukluks and sealskin mitts are still the clothes of choice for this time of year.

down and put the approach flaps in, according to Johnson. "He promptly flew it into the ground roughly after that," Johnson said. "It was whiteout conditions, the way he explained it. The airplane impacted the snow and slid for 100 feet."

Thursday evening, the National Weather Service was reporting cloudy skies and 10 mph winds. Parts of Nome at the time of the accident were experiencing complete whiteout conditions with fog and blowing snow on the ground. From the plane, Seetot said the weather appeared to degrade as they got closer to Nome. "On the Brevig side we could see ground here or there, or the mountain peaks. Once we got more on the Nome side, it got pretty white-out," she said.

Around 6:20 p.m. Hannon made his last communication with the base in Nome. After the radio went silent, Alaska State Troopers report that Frontier Alaska Nome Station Manager Shannon Thrun advised them of the overdue flight. Nome Volunteer Fire Department Search and Rescue was immediately called into action.

Seetot, who is from Brevig Mission, said everyone kept their composure after the crash. "We were all pretty calm, no hysterics," she said. "We were checking each other, asking each other, 'Can you move? Are you all right?'"

While most escaped relatively unscathed, passenger Heidi Graber, a NACTEC employee who lives in Teller, suffered a broken back in three spots and a fractured pelvis. Seetot was banged up with a swollen eye "the size of a golf ball" and bruising over much of her face. She and Graber were the only two to be hospitalized as a result of the wreck. "Heidi was next to me in the plane and now she's next to me in the hospital," Seetot said from her hospital room Friday.

Other passengers on the flight were Stewart Tocktoo, Rosie Ahnangnatoguk and Vernon Ozenna. All are from Brevig Mission.

Once they realized no one was critically injured, Seetot said the next order of business was to try and let people know their location. "We were asking the pilot if the ELT [emergency location transmitter] went off, if he could send out a signal," she said. "We all tried our cell phones." The plane's location, not too far east and downhill of Newton's south peak and a little more than a mile west of the Kougarok Road, was out of cellular phone range.

An ELT signal was in fact going out and help was on the way, but it would not arrive for a couple of hours. Searchers were initially directed to head out east toward Hastings and Cape Nome. Ensuing reports moved the searchers closer, directing them to the vicinity of Army Peak, about 3 1/2 miles south-east of the crash site.

Nome Fire Chief Matt Johnson said his searchers were first told to look seven miles east of the VOR site, which itself is a few miles east of Nome. Johnson said searchers tracking with two-way radios were able to hone in closer on the signal.

The search progressed as daylight quickly faded. "It went dark on us pretty quickly," Johnson said. Even with daylight, spotting the downed aircraft was likely to be a challenge, Johnson said. "A white airplane on a white mountain is pretty hard to find," he said.

When cell phones failed and the ELT did not lead searchers directly to the wreckage, it was an old-fashioned method of communication that finally alerted rescue crews to the waiting passengers' location. Seetot said fellow passengers Tocktoo and Ozenna decided to light a signal fire by soaking clothing or other material in gasoline. That fire caught Dexter resident David Olsen's attention, who in turn notified officials at about 8:50 p.m. "David Olsen said he saw a weird orange glow from the side of his house," Johnson said. "You can't go wrong with making a fire or setting off a flare."

Seetot said they could see the lights of searchers below in the valley while they waited, but none were turning in their direction. The fire quickly changed that. "I was so glad those boys thought about trying to burn something," Seetot said. "We seen only a couple of lights first, and then finally those guys put that stuff on fire. All of the sudden then there were lots of lights coming up the hill. It was such a good feeling to see those lights coming up the hill."

Despite the smell of gasoline, Seetot said she and other passengers remained in the plane. Seetot said pilot Hannon at one point left the plane talking about walking to the top of the hill where phone reception would be likely. He wasn't able to make it. "There was just too much snow I guess," Seetot said.

Seetot said the deep snow also made it difficult on the way down to the road as the passengers were transferred by snowmachine to ambulances waiting on the road. A gully northeast of the crash site swallowed snowmachines that ventured into it, she said. When the snowmachine on which she was riding became stuck in that gully, Seetot said she had to get off and hike back out to the hillside. Once back on the machine she had to brace for an aggressive ride to keep from again getting stuck. "I had to hang on for dear life," she said.

Graber, the passenger who suffered a broken back, was brought down the mountain in a sled towed by a snowmachine.

Seetot was released from the hospital late Friday night. She said she would be remaining in Nome for the week to attend the Kawerak Regional Conference.

Teamwork

When news of the missing plane got out, it did not take long for the cavalry to respond. A response came from Nome Search and Rescue volunteers, Troopers, Nome Volunteer Ambulance Service, National Guardsmen, Evergreen Helicopters, Norton Sound Regional Hospital, and other members of the community all stepped up to help. "There were lots of other people in this community helping us out with radio communication, with mapping, with just everything," Fire Chief Johnson said. "It takes a whole community to run an operation like this."

Johnson said 29 members of search and rescue participated in the effort. Plows were called out to clear the Kougarak Road, which was passable, but less than ideal for rescue vehicles. The National Guard's tracked-vehicles were ready to respond if needed. An Evergreen helicopter attempted to join in the search, but had to return due to weather, Trooper Sgt. Merrill said. "It was probably the smoothest search and rescue I've seen," Trooper Sergeant Andrew Merrill said. "Everybody did an awesome job."

Frontier Alaska President Jim Hajdukovich lauded all those who assisted in the search. "We're just very fortunate with the search and rescue efforts provided by the Nome community members," he said. "It was definitely humbling to see the efforts. People really went above and beyond."

For Matt Johnson, it wasn't the first time he has participated in a search for a plane that eventually ended up on Newton Peak. On May 14, 1998, a Baker Aviation Cessna 208 Caravan crashed near the same location, ending up on its roof. All 10 passengers survived the crash into the snowy hillside that occurred in whiteout conditions.

In the hours that passed between the initial report of the missing flight last week and the discovery of the passengers and pilot, expectations on the ground were grim. "At one point we were definitely thinking the worst and then there was the excitement hearing the news of the survivors, Hajdukovich said. "Now we're just hoping for a fast recovery of all the survivors."

NTSB investigator Clint Johnson said he was informed of the missing flight within a half hour of its disappearance. The initial reports had him packing his bags for a trip to the site, as is protocol when there are fatalities. "I thought for sure I was coming to Nome Thursday night," he said. Johnson was gratefully able to conduct his work from Anchorage.

Johnson said crash investigations typically take six months to a year. He said this investigation should be completed in that timeframe. Johnson said he will likely again interview the pilot, Hannon, since the initial debriefing was done quickly. "He was pretty emotional about the whole thing," Johnson said.

Johnson complimented Hannon and Frontier Alaska for their cooperation with the investigation to this point. "Not only the pilot, but also Frontier has been extremely helpful to give us a hand with this," he said.

Plane remains on hillside

bit of charred material—likely the improvised flare that drew rescuers to the site—could be seen in the snow just downhill of the plane, that appeared largely in tact. Part of a landing gear door was sticking out of the snow down slope from the rest of the plane. A large dent could be seen on the leading edge of one of the tail's horizontal stabilizers. No propeller was visible on the plane's left side, while one bent blade stuck out of the snow on the right. Other than that, the plane largely appeared to be in tact—albeit far out of place and nearly buried by snow.

After investigating the crash site late last week, the Federal Aviation Administration released the plane back to Frontier Alaska. Hajdukovich said a helicopter will most likely be used to hoist the aircraft from the slope and bring it back to the airport. As for what will then become of the aircraft, he said an insurance adjuster will determine if it is a total loss. "We're more interested in getting it out of there to where it belongs at the airport," Hajdukovich said.

Hajdukovich said Frontier Alaska would like to get the plane moved as quickly as possible and is waiting for the weather to cooperate and the availability of a helicopter capable of moving the wreckage.

The loss of the plane has not affected Frontier Alaska's scheduled service, Hajdukovich said, noting that the company has relocated aircraft to make up for the loss.

Stimulus plan prescribes new hospital for Nome

$152 million in Indian Health Service funds slated for new facility on Nome Bypass Road

By Tyler Rhodes

With the ink on the federal stimulus package barely dry, Nome is already in line to see one big project.

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich's office announced Monday that the Indian Health Service announced funding for the Norton Sound Regional hospital replacement project. Begich reported that HIS has approved $152 million for the major construction phase of the new facility.

Work on the new hospital has already been underway despite the complete funding package not yet being in place. Norton Sound Health Corp. board members and other dignitaries held a ground-breaking ceremony for the new facility last summer. Complete with golden shovels—perhaps a premonition as “shovel-ready” projects have become the buzzword associated with the federal stimulus package—the ceremony was held on the large gravel pad constructed for the facility last summer. This fall and winter pilings have been pounded for the project.

Phone calls to NSHC's acting chief executive officer Carol Piscoya to learn how the funding will impact the project were not returned by press time.

Last summer it was reported that NSHC was second in line for IHS funding for a new hospital behind Barrow. Rather than wait for IHS, the health corporation used Denali Commission funds to get the ball rolling. At that time $15 million of those funds had been spent for design work, the pad and steel piles.

The new hospital will replace the current 1950s-era structure on the corner of Bering Street and Fifth Avenue. The 144,000-square-foot structure will be located off the Nome Bypass Road and will be three times larger than the current facility.

The final version of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act included $227 million for two IHS projects already underway. Officials have told Sen. Begich the Norton Sound Regional Hospital and a project in South Dakota, were the two chosen by the IHS for the funding.

According to the project summary submitted to Sen. Begich, the hospital will create an estimated 200 construction jobs, many of them as early as this summer; an additional 100 new positions once it's completed; and 450 existing jobs will be retained.

The NSHC board of directors last summer approved a resolution putting IHS in charge of constructing the new hospital. The agreement allowed NSHC to retain some oversight and play an active role in the construction phase. The resolution also empowered NSHC's president and CEO to negotiate with IHS appropriate contracts and agreements, and as part of those negotiations to “promote regional and Alaskan Native preference in hiring and the use of alternative energy, both to the greatest extent possible,” according to the resolution.

was called by the board's executive committee Monday to accept Lake's resignation.

Efforts to contact Lake, whose number in Nome is unlisted, were unsuccessful Tuesday.

According to the press release issued by NSHC, Lake thanked the board “for a wonderful and rewarding experience over the last year.” The press release credits Lake for shepherding the new hospital construction project, including a redesign and the securing of all the necessary funding to complete its construction (see related story on page 6). “Both fiscal and operational policy changes during

Mr. Lake's tenure have benefited the corporation financially,” the press release reads.

Lake moved to Nome from Florida to take on the president and CEO job for NSHC. He had previously operated a company that ran hospitals in rural Florida and Mississippi. After selling that firm, he took a position as interim CEO for a hospital in Idaho. He started with NSHC on March 1 of last year.

NSHC counsel Helms said he was not aware of any hiring process being started yet to replace Lake, deferring the question to the board of directors. The board is next scheduled to meet March 6, Helms said.

Piscoya takes the helm as interim CEO during a dynamic period for the corporation. “I am happy to serve in this role and look forward to working directly with all divisions of the corporation,” she is quoted as saying in a press release. “With the new hospital construction, new village clinic planning and increased delivery of a variety of health services, this is an exciting time to be in rural health care.”

NovaGold may pay electric bill with land

By Tyler Rhodes

As NovaGold fought for its financial life after suspending operations at the Rock Creek Mine in November, some of its bills in Nome went unpaid.

With a new investor on board and its cash position again secured, NovaGold Chief Executive Officer Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse said last week that he came to town with a stack of checks in hand. “I think we're pretty well squared with everybody in Nome,” Van Nieuwenhuyse said last Thursday during a visit to Nome.

There is one bill, however, waiting to be resolved.

Nome Joint Utility System is owed money for electricity provided to the mine before its suspension. While NJUS General Manager John Handeland said NovaGold is prepared to wire funds to zero out its account, a land deal is also on the table. In an e-mail to The Nome Nugget Feb. 16, Handeland said NovaGold and the City of Nome have been in discussions for several weeks regarding property NovaGold owns near the city-operated Port of Nome. The property would be used for a port expansion.

Handeland said if the port were to ultimately receive title to the land from NovaGold, the Port of Nome would pay the utility. He also said NovaGold would pay off its debt directly to NJUS if an agreement is not soon finalized.

“Since NovaGold suspended operations they have continued to use our power and have made regular payments for the ‘new juice’ plus payments against old balance,” Handeland said in his e-mail to The Nome Nugget. “The utility will be paid one way or the other, either directly by NovaGold or by arrangement with the port.”

Handeland did not mention the amount of NovaGold's unpaid balance.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said he was grateful to those who waited for payment. “We are very appreciative that vendors held out,” he said. “Obviously it's not fun when you owe people money.”

Van Nieuwenhuyse said the company is now on solid footing after receiving $75 million in new investments since January. The lion's share of that money has come from Electrum Strategic Resources LLC, which invested $60 million with the option to buy more stock. “The investor has a high degree of confidence in the way we run our business,” Van Nieuwenhuyse said. As testament to that, he said the investor has not asked for a seat on the board despite now owning approximately 30 percent of the company.

Van Nieuwenhuyse also said Electrum believes in the value of resource businesses. “Gold's always been a store of value, and I think everybody in Nome understands that,” he said.

Jesuits file for bankruptcy in the face of abuse claims

By Diana Haecker

The Oregon Jesuits last week filed in the District of Oregon for bankruptcy protection in response to more than 200 claims alleging sexual abuse of children by Jesuits in the past.

Announcing the filing on February 17, Father Patrick Lee, Provincial of the order, said in a prepared statement, "Our decision to file Chapter 11 was not an easy one, but with approximately 200 additional claims pending or threatened, it is the only way we believe that all claimants can be offered a fair financial settlement within the limited resources of the Province."

In November 2007, the Oregon Province settled 110 claims of sexual abuse stemming from Alaskan victims for $50 million. The settlement was one of the largest paid out by a Catholic order and its insurer, and at that time, dealt with all Alaskan claims against the Jesuits. However, more claims surfaced during the bankruptcy proceedings by the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska.

Almost a year ago, CBNA filed for bankruptcy protection as the Fairbanks Diocese faced a myriad of claims against priests and lay workers allegedly sexually abusing children in Alaskan remote villages from the 1950s to the 1980s. As part of the bankruptcy proceedings, all persons who had a claim against CBNA had to come forward by December 2, 2008. This deadline created a whole new slew of sexual abuse claims against the CBNA and (since most Catholic priests active in Alaska also belonged to the Jesuits) the claims now also apply to the Jesuits' Society of Jesus, Oregon Province. The Jesuit order already faced 50 sexual abuse claims of minors stemming from priests working in the lower 48, but the additional 150 cases from Alaska forced the order to take action.

Anchorage attorney Ken Roosa, who represents most Alaska clergy sex abuse clients, said 61 cases that were pending in Bethel, are now on hold. "Right now, everything is on hold, including the case against the Vatican," said Roosa. "At this point, there are many more unknowns than there are knowns."

The Society of Jesus, Oregon Province oversees Jesuits in Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Washington and Oregon. The Oregon Province runs universities, high schools and parishes, which are separately incorporated entities and therefore untouchable to be liquidated.

The bankruptcy petition file said that the Province owns assets worth $4.8 million versus $61.7 million in sexual abuse claims.

"Chapter 11 will allow the Oregon Province to resolve pending claims, manage its financial situation and continue its various ministries in the Northwest in which it has been engaged since 1831," Provincial Lee said.

Pat Walsh, the Oregon Province public relations spokesman said that beyond the statement and a frequently asked questions sheet posted on the Jesuits' website, the Jesuits will make no further comment.

rapidly," he said.

Efforts were made to draw water from the nearby river, but problems with the pump and slush in the hose prevented it from working. Harrelson said the fire hydrant and 1 1/2-inch hose alone were not enough to effectively battle the blaze. Despite the equipment troubles, the fire was not allowed to spread to other structures.

"When we fight a fire like that, it really is an entire community effort," Harrelson said. "I was very impressed with some of the young people of White Mountain. They were on scene, trying to find jobs to do to assist. Some of the young girls were going door to door, trying to verify who was in the house."

Harrelson also said the village's firefighters and Fire Chief Eric Morris put on a tremendous effort to battle the fire.

Alaska State Trooper Sgt. Andrew Merrill said it appears the fire was accidental. "We're still in process of making the final determination," he said. Troopers and the state fire marshal were finally able to get to White Mountain on Monday after being hampered by weather for several days.

Merrill also said it appeared alcohol played a role in the incident. "The parties involved were drinking alcohol prior to the incident," he said. Merrill said the bodies of the victims have been sent to Anchorage for autopsies.

Harrelson said it appears that the fire started in the middle bedroom of the residence. "The burn patters determine that was the hot area, and it spread from there," Harrelson said. That room was Tiffany Lincoln's room.

Tiffany Lincoln, Harrelson's niece, was being raised by Josephine Lincoln, who was her grandmother. "Young Tiffany and her mother lost everything they owned in that fire," Harrelson said. "All she has is the clothes on her back." Harrelson said if anyone from Nome or the surrounding communities would like to help with clothing or other donations, they can contact the White Mountain Tribal Council by calling tribal coordinator Dorothy Barr at (907) 638-3651.

Josephine Lincoln and Dean Lincoln both lived at the house. Patrick Lincoln, who is a nephew of Josephine and is Tiffany's brother, and Oksoktaruk were visiting on the evening of the blaze.

Harrelson said the tragedy has hit the small community hard. "It's certainly difficult for families to deal with one death. When you multiply it by four, four deaths in a community as small as White Mountain literally touches everybody in some way," he said. "It affects the entire community."

Harrelson said he believes the house, built by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, was constructed some time in 1989 or 1990. He said it was a well-built and well-kept house. "The occupants of the house, they were very meticulous," Harrelson said. "It was a clean-as-a-whistle kind of house. They were very proud of it."

Harrelson said it is the first time he can remember losing community members in a fire. He said White Mountain is working on getting a new public safety building where fire-fighting equipment can be stored. "We're hoping for a legislative grant so we can fund and offer better fire fighting for our community," he said.

"It was like an oven on broil, trying to go in."

Friends of Pilgrim organize to advocate for public use

The Friends of Pilgrim Hot Springs held an organizational and scoping meeting Feb. 20 at the Nome City Hall Council Chambers. The purpose of the meeting was to document the concerns of residents of Nome and the communities of the Seward Peninsula relating to the future of the Pilgrim Hot Springs that is to be determined by the court system in a lawsuit involving the Diocese of Fairbanks.

Those attending gave comment about the historic and traditional use of the property and concern for its future. They hoped to keep the property open as a regional recreational area and promoted the concept of preservation rather than major development. They decided to hold their next meeting Friday, March 20.

Road to Nome study: Update finds highway to Nome “practical”

By Diana Haecker

A Western Alaska Access Planning Study project report released last week found that access from the Alaska highway system to western Alaska is “practical from an engineering, environmental and land management standpoint.”

The three-page report summarizes the first three phases of the ongoing study prepared by contractor DOWL HKM for the Alaska Department of Transportation.

In August 2008, DOT hired DOWL to analyze the realities of what it would take to build the 600-mile highway from the Alaska road system to Nome.

DOWL issued a first update in late January and made the document public last week.

“The first phase of work has demonstrated the capability to identify an east-west corridor in the WAAPS region, especially in a matrix of public and private roads,” summarizes the report. “It also clearly indicates a range of economic and community waypoints that would both benefit from a highway and would be critical to safely maintain and operate a long distance route between Fairbanks and Nome.”

Alaska’s vast expanses are crisscrossed by only a few roads, leaving all of the western communities of the state as stranded islands, only to be reached via airplane, boat, snowmachine or dog team.

The stated purpose of the highway is to “facilitate resource and community development in the western interior, central Brooks Range, and Seward Peninsula areas of the state.” In order to gain access to the land’s riches and to give villagers the eventual opportunity to drive to jobs at nearby mines yet to be developed, the DOT began looking at a possible connection from the road system near the Fairbanks and Nenana area to a wide swath of land to the west, all the way up to Bettles in the Brooks Range down to the southern shores of the Seward Peninsula.

A map attached to the project update document shows a mosaic of different colors, signaling various land ownership status. Landowners in the study area are the state, Native corporations, the federal Bureau of Land Management, a few enclaves of National Park Service land and several national wildlife refuges managed by the US Fish and Wildlife Service.

While the public at large has not yet had a say in the matter, the DOWL team had met with the region’s Native Corporations, borough and city governments and mine developers to float the idea of the project. “Throughout the consultation process, the team found strong support for a corridor between Fairbanks and Nome, and a willingness to assist as needed on further studies, including access across private lands and access to data useful for a design effort,” said the report.

The first phases of the study also included a review of existing literature and studies on the transportation corridor and developing a geographic information system database.

“The review of existing studies and discussions with resource development entities, including mineral exploration and development companies, indicate that building a mainline east-west corridor to which mineral developers can build, may provide the best option for moving forward with a public-financed highway,” says the report.

However, if the state were to build resource developers a road to their resources, the public needs to get something out of it as well. The report mentions that mine operators would have to build their own roads from the public road to the actual resource, where heavy equipment not legal on public roads can be operated.

No dollar figures are attached to the project yet, but estimates published in news articles ran $3.5 million per mile.

DOT spokesperson Meadow Bailey however cautioned that it is not set in stone what form the transportation corridor will take. “It’s a corridor, not road, what really is looked at. At this point, we’re not sure what it should be, a road, railroad or just a telecommunications corridor,” Bailey said in an interview with The Nome Nugget.

The question of how to maintain a 600-mile corridor through a region battered by ferocious winter weather for a large portion of the year, Bailey said, will be answered at the very end of the study period. The project report update suggests to “examine a ‘fee in lieu of taxes’ system for all-season, heavy haul operations on the public highway. This approach to industrial use of a public highway, combined with a public-private road identification effort, will help identify a cost-effective public highway corridor.

“This is a big overview that will determine what resources could be explored, which communities want the road to come and if the stakeholders in the region are in support of it,” Bailey said. “While the study is to gather a map of what resource is out there and in what quantities, the study is not just driven by that,” said Bailey. “A road to resource development has to be weighed evenly with the human aspect, what it would do to the communities.”

The next report due in March deals with resource analysis. A final report is slated to be issued in December 2009.

Girls take two

The Nome girls basketball team's journey to Bethel proved fruitful last weekend, as the Lady Nanooks swept the Warriors.

Vanessa Tahbone put up 19 points to lead the Lady Nanooks in Friday night's win against Bethel. Rachael Bauman added 13, and Iris Warnke-Green chipped in with 10 points for the 47-36 win.

Nome again was victorious Saturday with a final score of 39-35. Iris Wieler led all scorers with 11 points for Nome. Kira Polk added 14 for the Lady Warriors. The Lady Nanooks record improved to 13-7 for the season.

The Lady Nanooks finish their regular season this weekend with a trip to Kotzebue for two games against their perennial rivals.

Boys sweep Bethel at home

The Nanook varsity basketball team gave the hometown crowd something to cheer about with two wins over Bethel at Nome-Beltz last weekend.

Nome's Jesse Blandford exploded in the first half in Friday night's action, tallying all 17 of his points before halftime. The Nanooks grew their 12-point halftime lead over the next two quarters to win the game 66-43.

Jeremy Head scored 10 of his game-high 19 points in the third quarter to blow the lead wide open for the Nanooks. Christian Ostoski scored 16 points to lead the Warriors.

The Warriors met with a similar fate Saturday night when Blandford and Head each scored 21 to lead Nome to a 65-47 win. Mason Evans drained three 3-point goals for the Nanooks. Nome's season record improved to 17-4 with the pair of weekend wins.

Bethel did get some revenge in junior varsity action. On Friday, the JV Warriors wasted no time, outscoring Nome 19-9 in the first quarter. Zac Bourdon scored 11 points to lead the Nanooks and Nathan Blandford added 10.

On Saturday, Bethel's JV squad dispatched Nome 38-33. Bourdon and Josh McComas each scored 8 points for Nome.

The boys will be back for more at home this weekend, facing Kotzebue Friday and Saturday. These will be the boys' last regular season home games.

Nome will also play host for the 2009 Western Conference Basketball Tournament March 4-7. Participating teams are Barrow, Kotzebue, Nome, Hooper Bay, Bethel, Dillingham and Unalaska. The top two teams in both the boys' and girls' brackets will qualify for the 2009 Class 3A State Basketball Tournament.

It kind of puts horsepower to shame.

It's tough enough driving a thousand miles in a 150-horsepower car. Now imagine doing it in a 10-dogpower sled through long stretches of darkness at subzero temperatures. # HOROSCOPES

February 26 - March 4, 2009

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 19

Your candiness often gets you into trouble, Capricorn, but not this week. What you say is held in high esteem and launches you onto a new path.

ARIES
March 21-April 19

Envy gets the best of you, Aries, and you make a silly purchase. Don't beat yourself up about it. It happens to the best of us. Independence comes at a price for a young friend.

CANCER
June 22-July 22

Give your finances a quick once-over, Cancer. All is not what it seems. Motivation for health and fitness goals comes from a very unlikely source. Listen up!

LIBRA
September 23-October 22

Definitely, Libra. You deserve a promotion, and it is on the horizon. A squabble among friends brings out the best in you. Who knew you could be so smooth.

AQUARIUS
January 20-February 18

Good fortune smiles on you. Celebrate with a night on the town with friends, Aquarius. A small child leaves you with an interesting question to ponder.

TAURUS
April 20-May 20

Gifts of the heart make for a groovy time at work. A tasty treat is in order for the weekend, and surprisingly, it doesn't come from you, Taurus.

LEO
July 23-August 22

Thoughts of yesteryear plague your mind. Give some old friends a call and have a little get-together. You won't believe the laughs you have, Leo.

SCORPIO
October 23-November 21

Good riddance to a bad habit. You find the resolve to make a change stick, Scorpio. A health concern eases with an advancement in technology.

PISCES
February 19-March 20

Honestly, Pisces. Keeping your feelings under wrap is not helping the situation. Go ahead, open up and watch things happen. An e-mail proves inspiring.

GEMINI
May 21-June 21

Hear a friend out, Gemini. Their intentions were good: they just got off track somewhere along the line. A road trip sparks interest in a new endeavor.

VIRGO
August 23-September 22

Joy pays you a visit, Virgo, and you remember what life was like when you were young. Take steps to get back to that mindset, and success will be yours.

SAGITTARIUS
November 22-December 21

Your instincts are rarely off, Sagittarius, but that changes this week. You leap and fall, but lucky for you, a buddy is there to catch you and soothe things over.

Blonde Indian author Ernestine Hayes stirs Nomeites

Remembering who you are is key to combating cultural trauma

By Laurie McNicholas

Occasionally someone new comes to town for a few days whose presence lingers after her visit ends. And when she leaves behind a beautifully written book about her life, she may take up permanent residence in local memories.

The book is Blonde Indian, An when Ernestine entered first grade in what the author calls “the white people’s school” in the early 1950s. Her clothing was wrinkled and unwashed, in contrast to the stylish and tidy apparel of her classmates. Readers share with Ernestine her first sense of discrimination and alienation as she revisits her memo-

After leaving him and her three sons, she was often adrift in urban settings.

Turning toward home

However, Ernestine never forgot her grandmother’s words, “Remember who you are.” Homeless in San Francisco, she became inspired by the courage of an Aleut friend and decided to return to Juneau. “Knowing her became a gift,” Ernestine wrote of her friend. “I saw the substance of her courage and good fortune, and I learned that sometimes it’s enough just to show up in this world. Just to show up and say Here I am.”

At the age of 40 Ernestine headed toward Seattle in a battered old station wagon with her dog Gypsy and little else to reclaim her life in Lingit Aani, the land of the people, where she knew she belonged. She left behind in California her three sons and her mother, but she believed that her mother would follow her only child, and she did. Passages in Blonde Indian relate that her sons later joined her in Juneau too.

The book makes powerfully real the traumatic effects on generations of Tlingit Indians of their abrupt loss of an age-old way of life in the 1800s. Throughout her memoir, Ernestine contrasts the reflections of those losses in her life and the lives of her fictional Tlingit characters, Old Tom and his son Young Tom, with descriptions of the enduring aspects of Tlingit culture such as one’s clan membership, traditional stories and a love relationship with the land.

Ernestine’s writing style varies with her topic in the narrative. Her voice is at times caustic when she chronicles the lives of Old Tom and the Young Tom, and her experiences in a Juneau elementary school. Her descriptions of nature—the rainforest, glaciers, mountains, waters and creatures in her Southeastern Alaska surroundings—are lyrical. The accounts of her life experiences as an adult are simply honest and direct. Oratorical cadences emerge in her delineation of Tlingit society:

“...The clan forms the basic political unit; it is the clan with which an individual most profoundly identifies; it is the clan to which one’s allegiance is owed. It is the clan that forms relationships. The clan owns the crest, the stories, the histories, the right to use different parts of the land. And the names. We do not own our names. The clan owns our names. It is the clan that must never be denied and must never be abandone. It is the clan that will live on” (Blonde Indian, p. 53).

Ernestine returned to school during her first few years back in Juneau. She also worked in the summer aboard a small cruise ship, pointing out sights to tourists. As she reminisces about the ship’s trips to Skagway, Glacier Bay, Sitka, Petersburg and Wrangle in Blonde Indian, she guides readers to the ancient territories of various Tlingit clans and provides traditional place names and historical anecdotes.

Sharing our histories

Last month during her Nome visit, Ernestine captivated about 40 listeners with her presentation, “What Shall We Do with Our Histories?” As a participant in the NWC International Polar Year Speaker Series, she described the effects of trauma within the historical framework of colonization of Native Americans and Tlingit Indians in particular.

Here is a summary of the history she provided: Manifest Destiny, the historical belief that the United States was destined and divinely ordained by the God of Christianity to expand across the North American continent from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, provided a rationalization for American territorial expansionism, colonialism and war-making.

REMEMBER WHO YOU ARE—Ernestine Hayes explains how to combat cultural trauma. She was in Nome recently to lecture at the Northwest Campus, University of Alaska Fairbanks.

Alaska Native Memoir by Ernestine Hayes, whose Tlingit name is Saankalaxt. The author is an assistant professor of English at the University of Alaska Southeast. She traveled from Juneau to Nome late last month to teach a four-day course, “Introduction to Memoir,” for 18 students at the Northwest Campus, University of Alaska Fairbanks. She capped her visit to the region with two days in Savoonga, working with students in classrooms and discussing memoir writing with adults in the evening.

The title of Ernestine’s memoir is from a song, Blonde Indian, Blonde Indian, which her Tlingit grandmother, Ruth Willard Hayes, composed and sang to her as a child because she had light-colored hair. Published in 2006 by the University of Arizona Press, Blonde Indian won the American Book Award in 2007. The award was established in 1978 by a nonprofit education and service organization, the Before Columbus Foundation, to recognize outstanding literary achievement by contemporary American authors.

Ernestine was born in Juneau and raised in her early years by Ruth Hayes in her house at the edge of Juneau’s Indian village. Ernestine’s mother, Erma Daisy Hayes, was hospitalized with tuberculosis soon after Ernestine’s birth, first in Juneau and later in Seward.

Ruth Hayes grounded her granddaughter in the ways and stories of her people and taught her never to forget who she is. The family lived on poached deer and porcupine, soups made from meat market scraps and fried halibut cheeks from heads of fish discarded on the dock near a cold storage facility where Ernestine’s grandparents sometimes found work sliming fish. Their house had no refrigerator, freezer, hot water or shower.

Ruth’s efforts to instill a strong sense of identity and self-worth in her granddaughter were challenged ries of elementary school.

Erma Hayes returned to Juneau when Ernestine was 10 years old, and five years later they moved to California. By that time Ernestine had become incorrigible. She did not complete her sophomore year in high school. In the next 25 years she endured a long relationship with an abusive man in isolated rural areas.

Because I don’t want others to hurt the way I hurt inside, suicide prevention has become my passion.

On my mother’s tribal blanket, the courageous Coho salmon fights dangerous waters. Its message empowers me. I no longer stay quietly in the background. I speak out and watch for those who are hurting.

Tragically, people considering suicide often feel incapable of talking to those they love the most. That’s why we must all learn to recognize the signs of suicide risk and be ready to prevent it.

Trooper Beat

On January 7, Nome Alaska Bureau of Alcohol and Drug Enforcement was contacted by AMCC in reference to David Moore, 25, of Nome, who attempted to introduce tobacco and marijuana into the prison and deliver it to his inmate brother, Matthew Moore, 24, of Nome. Nome ABADE completed the investigation on February 9, and filed charges on both in the Nome Court.

On February 4, Nome ABADE contacted Yvonne Aukon, 19, of Nome. Investigation revealed Aukon was intoxicated, in violation of her release conditions and without her third party. An arrest warrant was obtained for her third party, Karla Aukon, 40, of Nome. Both were arrested and transported to AMCC.

On February 4, Nome ABADE located a suspicious parcel at the Nome Postal Annex. Investigation revealed Keshia Ozenna, 27, of Seward, mailed Sheena Ozenna, 24, of Diomed, 162.3 grams of marijuana. Charges will be filed with the Nome District Court.

On February 7, Nome ABADE and Nome AST assisted Nome Police Department search a local residence on suspicion of Minor Consuming.

On February 9, Nome ABADE contacted Mabel K. Geary, 43, of Nome, at a local air carrier in Nome. Incident to contact, six 750ml bottles of alcohol were seized from her luggage. Charges will be forwarded to Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals.

On February 10, at about 10:45 p.m., Savoonga VPOs responded to a residence for a complaint of a domestic dispute. Larry Kingekuk, 51, of Savoonga, was arrested for Disorderly Conduct, Resisting Arrest, and Assault IV and transported to Nome where he was lodged at AMCC. Alcohol was involved.

On February 11, Nome ABADE contacted Elias F. Milligrock, 22, of Shishmaref, at a local air carrier in Nome. Incident to contact, 2-750ml bottles of alcohol were removed from his jacket. Charges will be forwarded to OSPA.

On February 11, Nome ABADE contacted Sophie Tocktoo, 31, of Koyuk, at a local air carrier in Nome. Incident to contact, two 750ml bottles of alcohol were removed from her luggage. Charges will be forwarded to OSPA.

On February 16, Unalakleet AST received a report that a juvenile had been assaulted. Office of Children's Services has been notified and AST and the VPO are continuing the investigation.

On February 17, Nome ABADE discovered a suspicious parcel at the Nome Postal Annex. Investigation revealed that marijuana was concealed inside and it was headed to Diomed. Suspects have been identified and the investigation continues.

On February 19, at approximately 6:28 p.m., Nome AST was contacted by Frontier Alaska Station manager, Shannon Thrun, and advised of an overdue aircraft. The aircraft was being piloted by Frontier Flying Services Pilot Harland Hannan of Nome with five passengers from Brevig Mission: Johnee Seetot, Stewart Tocktoo, Rosie Ahnangnatoguk, Heidi Graber, and Vernon Ozenna. The aircraft was returning from Brevig Mission. Nome

Volunteer Fire Department Search and Rescue dispatched searchers immediately and AST also responded via snowmachine. Evergreen Aviation flew their helicopter for an aerial search with a medic and spotter, but deteriorating weather forced the helicopter to return to Nome. At approximately 8:30 p.m. ground searchers were advised by David Olsen a Dexter resident that he saw a light on the backside of Newton Peak approximately 8 miles north east of Nome. Searchers were guided to the light and located the aircraft, pilot and passengers. All were reported to be in good health with only minor injuries reported. Searchers transported the individuals to the Beam Road approximately 1 mile from the crash site to be taken to Norton Sound Hospital via ambulance for medical clearance. On February 20, investigation determined that poor weather contributed to the aircraft flying into the ground. No mechanical issues were reported prior to the incident. Alcohol was not involved. All passengers were transported to NSH. Two individuals were admitted for treatment of injuries sustained in the crash. All searchers returned and no injuries of searchers were reported. NVFD Engine 8, which responded to the area, became stuck off the shoulder of the road but was extricated by a bulldozer and loader. NTSB and the FAA were notified of the crash and investigators traveled to Nome. NVFD SAR, Nome Ambulance EMS crew and NSH staff were exceptional and instrumental in a fast and successful resolution to this event.

On February 8, at about 10:53 a.m., Nome AST received a report of an assault on a 17-year old girl in the Nome area. Investigation completed and charges forwarded to the Nome Youth Facility.

On February 10, at about 6:20 p.m., a 17-year old male was detained on a detention order for violating his conditions and subsequently transported to Nome where he was lodged at Nome Youth Facility

On February 20, at 11:41 p.m., the AST received a report of a residential structure fire in White Mountain. Subsequent investigation shows four people died in the fire: Josephine Lincoln, 71; Frank Oksotruk, 51; Dean Lincoln, 43; and Patrick Lincoln, 24; all from White Mountain. The White Mountain Volunteer Fire Department responded and controlled the blaze to prevent it from spreading to other homes. Entry into the residence was attempted, however, due to smoke and heat rescue was not possible. Next of kin have been notified. Alcohol is a factor in this case. Investigation continues.

On February 22, at 2:21 a.m., the AST received a report of a disturbance in Gambell. Douglas Henry, 30, of Gambell, was subsequently charged with Probation Violation and Misconduct Involving Weapons IV.

On February 22, Unalakleet AST received a report of an assault at the St. Michael School on February 16. Investigation revealed a student had assaulted a staff member. Charges are being referred to the Juvenile Probation office.

On February 22, Nome ABADE and Nome AST acted on an anonymous tip and contacted Karen Nguyen, 53, of Anchorage, at a local air carrier. Incident to contact, 3.1 grams of marijuana was seized from her jacket. Charges will be forwarded to the Nome DAO.

ated by the Tlingits because it was good for trade. Then the fur trade became unprofitable, the United States bought Alaska from the Russians, and Manifest Destiny was extended beyond North America's contiguous continental borders.

That meant Native Alaskans soon would be forced to speak English, convert to Christianity and adopt European ways. A period of rapid and overwhelming loss began for Tlingits. When they lost their ancestral fishing rights, many lost wealth and status. Some were able to retain their language and traditional practices for another generation or two.

Beginning in the late 1800s and continuing through the 1960s, Tlingit children were removed from their homes to boarding schools where they lost their Native language, identity and history.

Effects of trauma

"The traumatic effect of these national policies of Manifest Destiny, removal, assimilation, and conversion is undeniable," Ernestine said. "When a seemingly endless and overpowering force of people confronts a group of people already in place with the articulated purpose of destroying their culture, the inescapable result is cultural trauma. The only question might be how long it will take.

"For cultures that were in existence for thousands and tens of thousands of years, it's reasonable to expect that when those cultures are dealt a killing blow—a killing blow delivered over a span of 50 to 60 years—the death, even a speedy one, will take three or four generations," she continued. "When seen in that light, we can recognize that the symptoms we bemoan—high incarceration rates, suicide rates, alcoholism, high school drop-out, college drop-out, smoking, early pregnancy, depression, tuberculosis, poverty, removal of children, abuse, domestic violence, termination of parental rights, fetal alcohol—are symptoms of cultural trauma. We are witnessing the death throes of a culture. And as we do when we attend any death, we must do so with the constant knowledge that in spite of the agony, in spite of the great sorrow, in spite of the stink, we are witnessing something sacred."

Ernestine asked her audience to imagine what would happen if in the year 2010 the American culture is abruptly subdued by another culture that considers theirs far superior. She then described a series of losses, humiliations and resulting traumas ironically similar to those Native Americans have experienced in the past 250 years or so.

Turning back the tide

"I speak for a moment to my relatives," Ernestine said. She described a carved memorial pole at Saxman village near Ketchikan depicting a young man with his arm caught by a giant clam. She said the pole was carved in memory of a youth who lost his life when his arm was caught by a giant clam and as a cautionary lesson to those who would reach into traps. Several teenage boys in the audience listened with rapt attention.

Ernestine explained how the pole symbolizes the willingness of Native Americans to adopt the ways of the dominant culture, for example to use alcohol and to see the land and its resources as exploitable for industrial purposes.

"Whether from curiosity, hunger or greed, or because we had no choice, we have reached into the unknown," she said. "We are caught in the grip of a giant trap, and now the tide is upon us. But it is not too late to free ourselves. We can take wisdom from the story of the man who was caught in a deathly grip and because of it lost his life. We can pause to consider the choices we make. We can be mindful of our own culture and own land and our own history. We can reach not into a trap but into the box of wisdom. By remembering who we are, we can turn back the tide."

What can non-Natives do?

Ernestine offered pointers to non-Native persons whose activities

FISHERIES SAFETY ORIENTATION CLASS
April 5 - 15, 2009

On behalf of the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation (NSEDC) Board of Directors, the NSEDC Employment, Education & Training (EET) Department is happy to announce a fisheries safety orientation class at the Alaska Vocational Technical Center in Seward, Alaska on April 5 - 15, 2009. The class is limited to fifteen participants with a deadline of March 24, 2009, when the selection will happen in the evening. In compliance with the U.S. Coast Guard Zero Tolerance Law, each trainee must pass a drug screen urinalysis and stay off the alcohol during training and employment working on our trawlers, crabbers, and long-liner vessels in the Bering Sea. Required to work sixteen hours a day seven days a week upon successful completion of the training, each trainee must pass a physical examination and document a hearing test at the Norton Sound Regional Hospital. Applications can be received from your local NSEDC Community Liaison or by calling Jerry at 1-800-385-3190.

Thank you

The Davis and Ningeulook families say "thanks for all the support and prayers given to us during our time of need."

To the Shishmaref Health Aides, NSHC Medivac Staff, including Mike Owens and EMS Team and Bering Air for bringing us home, to Fairbanks Memorial Hospital Staff, to the wonderful staff at ANMC in caring for our Mom, to the relatives and friends just for being there (Gertie Ahne, Edna Iyatunguk, Skeeter and Queenie Davis, Geraldine Kiyutelluk, Alma Mullins, and Doreen Sanders) to give us love and support, to the Lutheran Church (Anchorage) ladies for their beautiful singing, also to Robin Kiyutelluk and her mom for singing, a special thank you to Pastor Karen Sonray, Lorena and Sheila Seetomona, Jennifer and Janelle Pootoogooluk, Bill Hendricks, Eva and Brittany Kiyutelluk, Gladys Hendricks and Marilyn Kuzuguk for bringing us food while in Anchorage, to Pastor Karen Sonray, Covenant Church Pastor and Pastor Lee Boleman for your prayers. In Anchorage to Gladys Hendricks and Harriet Cutshal; in Nome to Iva Ailak, Florence McComas, Dorcas and Wayne Walluk for preparing our Mom's casket, to Floyd Waluk Jr. for giving our brother a place to stay while in Anchorage, to Nora and Jennie Kuzuguk for their loving support waiting for us when we arrived in Anchorage, a special thank you to Anna Kuzuguk, the IRA and SDMA Staff for their donations and making it possible for our brother to go down to Anchorage, to Grace Minix for allowing us to use her car to make Mom's funeral arrangements, to Sheryl Nayokpuk for bringing food everyday, to Sharon F. Nayokpuk, Esther and Pauline Iyatunguk in preparing for the potluck after the funeral, to everyone that brought food for the potluck, to Carol Piscoya and the Miller family for the beautiful fresh flowers; also to Amelia "Pinky" Iyatunguk (Anchorage) for the flowers, to Sandra Tahbone for the food for the potluck, to Elmer Avesuk for the love and support and prayers, also Millie Kuzuguk for being with the rest of my family, to Kevin and Tony Cabinboy for driving to Anchorage to see mom, to Flora Weyiouanna, Ruby and Bill Jones, Rachel Stasenko, William "Boy-Boy" Keller for sending and bringing food to our home, a special thanks to Julie Renwick (NSHC Social Worker) for assisting us in arranging Mom's funeral preparations and paperwork, to all the grave diggers for their hard work in digging the ground, to Robert Iyatunguk, Harry Al Ningealook, and Ronald Davis for making the cross, to Johnson Eningowuk, Calvin Nayokpuk and Elmer Nayokpuk for making the box. To the community of Shishmaref thanks for the singspiration the day before our mother's funeral—it bought so much comfort to all of us. Last, thank you to Bess Miller (Augusta Georgia) for calling me, giving me love and support and prayers every day—once again "thank you" to all the people in the region for all the love, caring and prayers given to us during the loss of our dear Mother. God Bless You all.

Stella, Fred, Ronald and Pearl
If we forgot anyone, please forgive us.

Wedding Bells

Terra Jade Abbott and Christopher Thomas Aningayou were joined in vows of holy matrimony on February 14, at River of Life Assembly of God Church in Nome with Rev. Henry Reiber officiating. The maid of honor was Nancy Ahnangnatoguk and the best man was Frank Johnson. Bridesmaids were Diana Ellana and Mary Ruud, groomsmen were Scott Aningayou and Christopher Ahl. The flower girl was Teri Ruud, the ring bearer was Teag Green-Johnson, and usheress was Edna Ruud.

Also in attendance were the parents of the bride, James and Marcis Abbott; parents of the groom, Robin Thomas and Audrey Aningayou; the groom’s grandparents, Perry and VALENTINES—Terra Jade Abbott and Christopher Thomas Aningayou were wed on Valentine’s Day in Nome.

Nancy Mendenhall; groom’s sister Debbie Aningayou and her daughter Sierra, and many other relatives and friends. The floral arrangements featured purple iris; the corsages were salmon-pink carnations.

The wedding party entered to music by Dorcas Bloom. The mothers of the bride and the groom lighted special candles to symbolize the unity of the two families. The bride was then given away by her father. A double ring ceremony included special vows spoken by the couple to each other and a private communion service with the pastor.

The beautiful ceremony was followed by a reception and wedding feast at the Pioneer’s Hall, with a great display of different dishes.

The blessing was given by Marie Malewotkuk, the groom’s great aunt.

The joyous evening was capped off with toasts of the bride and groom, cutting of the wedding cake, and live music by Louie Green’s band. This included a special solo with guitar, Unchained Melody, by the bride’s father and with the wedding party and many guests then dancing to old favorites.

Elizabeth Marguerite “Betty” Walsh

Elizabeth “Betty” Marguerite Walsh was born September 11, 1921 in Rahway, New Jersey to Joseph Petry and Frances Olinger Petry. She died February 5 in Seattle. One of 10 children, she grew up in Floral Park on Long Island, New York. During World War II she came to Seattle to train and work for the Civil Aeronautics Board. She was stationed in British Columbia, and then in Anchorage, where she met, fell in love with, and married her husband, James “Jim” Minor Walsh in 1946. Betty’s life work centered around her family. She bore and raised 10 children and took care of many others. Having lost her father during the Great Depression, she learned early and well how to make do with little and to make a little go a long, long way. Betty’s hands were always busy.

In addition to being a full-time homemaker, Betty was active in her community. Her many civic activities were inspired by a deep belief in peace and justice. She was involved with, among others, Servas International, the Catholic Church, the League of Women Voters, Girl Scouts of America, The Irish-American Heritage Society, and she helped prepare meals at the Blessed Sacrament Feed-In early on Sunday mornings.

Betty’s paid work outside the home included work as a bank teller after her high school graduation; a teletype operator and air traffic controller for the CAB; a poll worker for elections in Ketchikan, and in Seattle; a clerk and teaching aide in the Seattle School District; and as late as 2002, a census taker. In her spare time, Betty loved to bake for friends and family; pick fruit and make jam; solve crossword and jigsaw puzzles; and read.

She was a Yankees and Mariners fan and an avid traveler to everywhere and anywhere, and loved keeping up correspondence with family and friends around the world. Her endless dedication to her family and her work was a wonderful gift that will not be soon forgotten.

Betty was well-loved and will be dearly missed by all especially, her loving husband of 62 years, James Minor Walsh and their children, Mary T. Jones, Elizabeth A., Nora L., J. Timothy (Diane), Eileen F. (Gee), C. Erin (Michael), James D. (Kathy), Michael B., Joan C. Campbell (Bruce), Thomas A. (David); her grandchildren, Jennifer (Dan), Matthew , Seamus, Andrea (Chris), Caitlin, Brigid, Kyle, and Christopher; six great-grandchildren plus one more on the way; her sisters, Dr. Mary Ann Petry and Sister Benedict de Saint Augustine, and her brother, Jim Petry. She was preceded in death by her grandson Jaron.

A funeral mass was celebrated Tuesday, February 10, at Blessed Sacrament Church in Seattle. Remembrances may be made to The Blessed Sacrament Feed-In, the St. Vincent de Paul Society of Blessed Sacrament, or your local Food Bank. Please sign the online guestbook at www.legacy.com Hoffner Fisher and Harvey.

bring them into contact with Native issues.

“All Native cultures and world-views are as rich and complex as the land from which they emerged,” she noted. “If we truly learn about one another—if we are silent for an extra moment when we think and before we speak—if we remember that dominant is not a synonym for superior—then perhaps we can take some time to evaluate not the shortcomings of others but the limitations of our own ways of seeing.

“What shall we do with our histories?” she asked.

“We must confess our histories. We must acknowledge our histories. We must remember our histories. It is only after those things are done that we can begin to heal, and to communicate with one another as the equals that we are.

“Let us tell each other stories that underscore the parallel nature of our lives. Let us tell each other stories that value the evident relationship in our condition. Let recognition and respect and knowledge travel in both directions. It’s not only Native people who need to remember who we are.”

Ernestine then told the audience who she is, identifying herself in both Tlingit and English by her names, tribe (Eagle), clan (Burnt House Clan) and the house to which she belongs (Wolf). “I am a grandchild of the Gunaxteidi,” she said. “Yan wa shaa: I am a Kaagwaantaan woman. Sheetka Kwaan: My clan springs from Sitka.”

Hayes’ students comment

“We had fun in her class!” said Denise Olin of the introductory course on memoir writing that Hayes taught last month in Nome. “Most of us laughed and cried through the four days we met. We did some very interesting exercises. For instance, she had us write three separate short stories and then look at our first and last short story to see if they were related. She said if they were related, this could very well be a theme for our memoir. She is a wonderful instructor, and she is good at keeping her student’s attention. She is very encouraging, which is sometimes hard to find in a classroom setting.

“I found the class extremely inspiring,” said Michele Murphy. “It really motivated me to get back to my writing and spend more time doing it. And I think Ernestine’s teaching style is fabulous because she gives concrete advice rather than esoteric criticism. I love the prompts and hope to use them on a regular basis. They are a great way to get started writing on a new topic.”

Wilfred Anowlic said he took Hayes’ course because he wants to write a memoir about growing up on King Island. He began to jot his memories in journals years ago, noting how much his life had changed when he moved to Nome in 1959. For the course he wrote a short story about beginning his work life in Nome at the age of 16 and the pleasure of attending movies at the local theater. “When I turned in my story, Ernestine said, ‘You have a strong voice.’ I said, ‘Really, I do?’ She was a very good teacher, and it was hard work.”

School board looks in house for new super

By Tyler Rhodes

Nome Public Schools is again on the search for a new superintendent.

In a letter to the school board March 23, Superintendent Rick Luthi asked that he be let out of his three-year contract at the end of the current school year. The school board granted his request, which will time his exit for June.

Luthi said his request to exit his contract after just one year was made for personal reasons. "I felt that this was the decision I needed to make," he said. He did not elaborate on the reasons for his departure.

In both his letter to the board and an interview, he stressed over and over that his leaving is not based on any rift between him and the board, nor dissatisfaction with the job or community. "I had every hope and desire to stay here for a few years," he said.

Luthi's resignation has put the Nome Board of Education into high gear to fill the soon-to-be open position. The board met mid-day Monday to put a hiring plan in motion. Board President Gloria Karmun suggested initially opening the search for candidates both locally and outside the district. However, in the interest of time and financial considerations, most board members wanted to first attempt to find a replacement within the local ranks. "It's late in the game to do the type of search we did last year," board member Betsy Brennan said.

The board opted to advertise internally for the position from March 30 to the end of the business day April 6. The board plans to review the applicant pool during an executive session at an April 7 meeting which is primarily scheduled for taking public comment on the school budget.

Luthi was named as the board's choice for superintendent Feb. 29 last year after an extensive nationwide search for a replacement for

Survey: Western Alaskans shell out the most for fuel

By Laurie McNicholas

This winter western Alaska communities paid the highest average retail prices in the state for heating fuel at $7 per gallon and gasoline at $6.75 per gallon, according to findings of a survey of 100 communities by the Division of Community and Regional Affairs (DCRA).

Results of the survey are summarized in a recent report, Current Community Conditions: Fuel Prices Across Alaska, February 2009 Update.

North Slope region communities reported the lowest average heating fuel retail price of $1.77 per gallon. The seven North Slope communities are excluded from DCRA's statewide summary of heating fuel prices because the North Slope Borough provides free heating fuel for residential use through village corporations. The corporations distribute fuel to residents throughout the borough, charging only a delivery fee on a per gallon basis.

Many remote rural Alaskan communities took delivery of a year's supply of fuel at peak oil prices in the summer of 2008 due to transportation issues. Alaska North Slope crude soared to a record average monthly price of $133.78 per barrel in June 2008, notes the DCRA report. By December 2008 the price of North Slope crude had nose-dived to $37.70 per barrel, and the drop continued in January 2009 to $37.38.

The national average price of gasoline dropped 55 percent from its peak of $4.05 per gallon in mid-July 2008 to $1.84 at the end of January, reports the DCRA. National average heating fuel prices have dropped 36 percent since October 2008, from $3.66 to $2.36 per gallon. Alaska has not experienced the same level of decline.

The DCRA survey found statewide average prices of $5.60 per gallon for heating fuel, excluding North Slope communities, and $5.51 per gallon for gasoline. In 2008 the Alaska Legislature authorized a $1,200 energy rebate to every Alaska resident eligible to receive a Permanent Fund Dividend.

Four Bering Strait communities—Brevig Mission, Gambell, Golovin and Koyuk—were among 20 western Alaska communities included in the DCRA survey. All except Golovin

Shelter from the cold

By Tyler Rhodes

In the early morning hours Sunday, the rumbling of snores reverberates throughout the normally silent meeting hall inside Nome's Nazarene Church.

Outside, a brisk wind is cutting its way through Nome's streets, blowing snow and driving the wind chill well below 0°F.

For the 15th night in a row the room is filled with cots that are occupied by those who—for whatever reason—would otherwise likely be taking shelter in less hospitable environs.

Around 3 a.m., the eighth guest for the evening comes in from the cold.

The late-arriving gentleman, almost 50 years old, is talkative. He stumbles back and forth from his cot to the attendants monitoring the room. He gulps down an instant Cup of Noodles and tries to start a conversation from the other side of the room. The other guests stir. Finally, after several requests and the threat of having to leave, he plops onto his cot one last time and passes out.

The snoring again dominates the room and the 17th night of operation for Nome's emergency shelter would soon come to a close.

As warmer days approach, this incarnation of Nome's emergency shelter will also come to its end. The shelter, operated by a loosely organized group dubbed the Nome Emergency Shelter Team, or NEST, was designed as a band-aid approach to a problem that has plagued Nome probably since the

Dear Editor,

I think the Barrick Gold Corporation should be repentant because of the tremendous amount of environmental damage and human suffering it has caused the people at the Porgera Mine in the highlands of Papua, New Guinea.

It is on the same size scale as the proposed Donlin Creek mine slated to operate 12 miles north of Crooked Creek in the very remote Middle Kuskokwim area of Alaska. The Donlin Creek Mine is a joint venture between Barrick and NovaGold Resources and they call the project the Donlin Creek LLC.

The ores from the Kuskokwim area are similar as the ores in PNG in that they have to be heated to around 500 F° in large autoclaves referred to as the ‘bomb.’ This heating process releases toxic elements such as sulfides, arsenic and mercury into the air.

In Papua they save money by the ‘riverine’ disposal system. That sounds pretty good but wait, it’s just a fancy way of saying that the toxic tailing are dumped directly into the river. The river downstream for 150 Km is called the “sacrifice zone.” There are no regulations concerning chemicals such as arsenic dumping into this zone. This “sacrifice zone” is like something out of the Twilight Zone. In Alaska we call these areas Mixing Zones where the contaminants are very controlled. The entire Kuskokwim River is already “mercury stressed.” Why add more when the people are already told not to eat the larger pike because their flesh contains toxic amounts of mercury?

In Papua there is a story about a person that ate the stomach of a pig that lived in the most toxic area, just downstream from the mine. He died of acute arsenic poisoning a few hours later. Many others have died of arsenic toxicity, according to an Adventist hospital spokesman.

Barrick Gold is such a godawful company with many documented human rights violations—like murder and rape.

The private security force of 500 guards has admitted to killing eight people when they trespassed —without any remorse. They just shot them down like rabid dogs. There is one guard per every four workers!

With what Barrick has done to the lands in Papua they need to be held accountable. Barrick is flying the peoples of the Middle Kuskokwim region to mines in Nevada and Fairbanks to show them how safe mining is.

I challenge Mr. Regent, the CEO of Barrick Gold and Donlin Creek’s President, Doug Nicholson to provide a tour of the Porgera Mine. Ask for it – they won’t accept the challenge.

airborne mercury emissions from gold mines.

I am asking The Kuskokwim Corporation and the Calista Corporation and the people of the Kuskokwim region to be careful whom you deal with. Corporations, just like people, are hard to change. In the long run it is not worth the jobs for 22 years being left with an environmental problem for many, many generations to come. Most important, why should you deal with such a predatory company that has no respect for human life?

go without. The children are the future, not windmills and solar panels and corporate offices and constant capital expenditures. But you hide behind these expenditures with vast waste of overhead year after year. I just received hundreds of letters today from your children and shareholders talking about the benefits and future they hope for, but you don’t want that, do you?

A perfect example is from previous years when I complained that money I was bringing in to one of your villages was going to be stolen by the local IRA. I said I don’t get paid, you don’t get paid— so they refused the money. I sat there and watched them do fraud in paperwork claiming labor and material that did not exist, and their comment was, “We don’t need programs, we need drugs to medicate these people. That IRA wanted to keep their people medicated, addicted and ignorant so they could stay in control of the power, and the Native corporation in charge of handing out the money only cared about their cut of the money. However, since that time things have changed and the Native

The Check is in the Mail

Nome has been cut off from the rest of the world. Well, most of it, anyway. With Mt. Redoubt shaking its volcanic ash in the air, Mother Nature has given us a chance to practice our self-sufficiency and appreciate our isolation. We get no jets from Anchorage and beyond, thus we have no mail, no bills, and, “the check is in the mail” takes on a whole new meaning. Most credit card companies don’t have a clue when we say, “The volcano blew.”

Since we can’t get out of town (well, we could fly a small plane to Fairbanks and then drive or ride the rails to Anchorage, but then we’d be stuck in Anchorage), we can put aside our thoughts of sandy beaches at Maui or Mazatlan and settle for a sultry sauna at the Nome Rec Center or a relaxing swim at the Nome-Beltz pool. We can be glad we’re safe in our own homes instead of breathing volcanic ash and sulfur fumes in Anchorage or camping out at the Seattle airport. Our grocery stores are well stocked. We may run low on fresh milk but we seem to have a good supply of toilet paper, Pampers and beer.

The eruption of Mr. Redoubt makes us reflect upon how dependent we are on the rest of the world. Can we keep our lifelines open? Can we keep our communication links? How would we handle medical emergencies? Are we prepared? We can spend quality, uninterrupted time contemplating such controversial topics as: Should Nome stay on Daylight Savings Time, or should we stick with Standard Time? Should we shovel snow, or wait for it to melt? Should we go skiing, or snooze in front of the TV? Should we walk to the Post Office to see if our spring gardening and seed catalogs have arrived? Can we whistle the song “Where Were You When the Volcano Blew?” — N.L.M.—

How can a company like Barrick Gold pollute the rivers, land and Pacific Ocean in one part of the world and come to the US and claim to be able to do everything right? Why should Alaskans support the Barrick with their third-world, human rights violations of the indigenous people? I would be concerned that it may happen to you.

The next think I think is that the Donlin Creek LLC will be asking Alaska and the US for monies to build up the infrastructure such as roads, dock and new airport. I feel in light of all the human misery they caused around the world, why should we Alaskans offer them any help for building up the infrastructure at the Donlin Mine? They are the largest gold miner on earth; let them do it on their own.

Today, there are no standards, no regulations on airborne mercury emissions from gold mines in the US. The large gold companies want to keep it like it is today, with self-regulation. The Donlin Creek folks are telling the people in the villages they can remove 99.5 percent of the mercury. I don’t know if this is possible because they have not done it in the past, even at their showcase Goldstrike Mine in Nevada. By 2010 the EPA will establish standards for

We are working hard as we are nearing the end of session - only 20 days to go. I will keep this short in the interest of getting some information to you quickly on the federal economic stimulus package

Much of our time and efforts have been with the federal economic stimulus package or as it is called, the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. Leadership of the Senate and House have partnered with the Denali Commission and the Federal Executive Association to open the “Alaskan Clearinghouse” on March 27. This office is dedicated to helping Alaskan communities and non-profit groups navigate the grant opportunities available through the ARRA. This will provide a needed service to those of you who are asking questions about what is available and who do not want to miss out on grant opportunities. “With all the confusion that exists around the stimulus money, Alaskans need a central location to call where they can learn what is available and how to apply for the funds,” said House Finance Co-Chair Mike Hawker. The office will be housed at the Denali Commission Offices at 510 L Street, Suite 410 in Anchorage, and they can be reached at 1-888-480-4321.

The Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities announced that it will put out to bid an economic stimulus construction project in Kotzebue that will begin this summer. The planned Shore Avenue project will construct erosion protection and roadway improvements from Lake Street to the Crowley Docks. One of the most important results we all expect is increased safety with better lighting, safer sidewalks for pedestrians, and reducing erosion that has been on the minds of Kotzebue’s residents for quite some time.

My Senate Bill 111 just passed the House, and changes the timeframe for state DOT Certificates of Compliance for intrastate commercial air carriers. Currently, certificates run from January through December each year, but air carriers initiate or renew their liability insurance policies throughout the year. Once the governor signs this legislation, a period of “any twelve months” will replace the calendar period in statute, thereby matching the renewal period to the policy period. This will save air carriers and the state DOT time, money, and the need for twice-yearly renewals in most cases.

Rifleman charged with assault

By Tyler Rhodes
A Nome man is facing assault and weapons charges after allegedly brandishing a loaded rifle in downtown Nome last Thursday. According to the Nome Police Department, Alvin Amaktoolik, 22, was seen around 11 a.m. March 26 walking southbound on Division Avenue carrying a rifle and a bottle of whiskey. Police responded and reported finding Amaktoolik on Front Street near Nome Liquor and Grocery. Amaktoolik was taken into custody after reportedly attempting to raise the muzzle of the .204-caliber rifle in the direction of the responding officers. According to a press release from Nome Police, a citizen assisting the officers discovered a live round in the chamber of the rifle after inspecting it to make sure it was safe. “There was just one round, but it was chambered and ready to rock and roll,” said

Nome Police Chief Dallas Massie. Police say their investigation concluded that Amaktoolik had also aimed the rifle at a passerby. He has been charged with two counts of third-degree felony assault and one count of fourth-degree weapons misconduct, a misdemeanor. Massie said the police investigation determined that the rifle Amaktoolik brandished was stolen. He said further charges against Amaktoolik in regard to the stolen weapon would be likely in the future. According to Massie, Amaktoolik was highly intoxicated at the time of the incident. Instead of being taken directly to Anvil Mountain Correctional Facility, police brought Amaktoolik to Norton Sound Regional Hospital. He spent several hours at the hospital in restraints due to his extremely high blood alcohol content, police said.

According to Massie, once in custody, Amaktoolik did not pose a problem for the officers. “He was pretty docile. I was amazed he wasn’t comatose,” Massie said. Amaktoolik made his first appearance in District Court March 27. During that appearance, District Attorney John Earthman requested that a significant bail be set for Amaktoolik, citing a prior conviction for sexual assault and having “spectacularly” failed to meet the terms of his probation for prior offenses. In court it was reported that Amaktoolik’s blood alcohol content was above 0.5 percent, a level that many consider lethal. Earthman got his wish. District Court Judge Bradley Gater set bail for Amaktoolik at $20,000 along with the requirement for a third-party custodian. A preliminary hearing in the case is scheduled for April 6 at 1:30 p.m.

Stimulus funds bound for Nome public housing

$80,000 to be spent in Nome to repair doorways of units in the Beringview complex

By Tyler Rhodes

Residents of the Beringview housing units in Nome should be a little bit warmer next winter thanks to federal stimulus funds.

The Alaska Housing Finance Corp. is to receive more than $3 million through the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. Among the projects to be funded is the weatherization of 33 units in the Beringview complex.

According to Jim Gurke, AHFC's public housing director, $80,000 is allotted for the weatherization and replacement of entryway doors in the units. "We're going to try and do something with the entryways themselves to make them more tight," Gurke said. "The way they're sitting, they get a lot of rain and weather driving against them."

Gurke said the Nome project is part of AHFC's five-year plan; however, no funding had previously been allotted for it.

Gurke said federal guidelines require that the funds be obligated for the project within 120 days. Despite some confusion over when the clock starts ticking on that 120-day timeline, he said work on the project should start relatively soon. "We expect the work to be going on this summer and to complete the work this summer," he said.

Other communities in the state receiving funds are Anchorage, which will get $700,000 for painting, driveway and parking lot paving, and boiler replacements at three sites. Fairbanks is to receive $1.4 million to reconstruct a four-plex lost in a fire and the re-siding of a 30-unit public housing complex. Ketchikan will get $102,600 for improvements at two public housing sites. Bethel will receive $230,000 for flooring replacement and foundation stabilization of the 117 single-family homes that make up the community's public housing inventory.

The $3.3 million AHFC is receiving and distributing is funneled through the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development, which has nearly $3 billion to disperse to 3,000 local housing authorities nationwide. This money is in addition to $39 million going to 237 Native villages and tribal organizations in Alaska under the Native American Housing Block Grant for energy efficient modernization of and renovation of housing maintained by Native American housing programs.

reported much higher fuel and gasoline prices than statewide average prices. The retail selling price per gallon for heating fuel and gasoline, respectively, was $7 and $6.80 in Brevig Mission, $7.88 and $7.26 in Gambell, $5.32 and $5.30 in Golovin and $8.06 and $7.71 in Koyuk.

Last summer Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. arranged for shipments of heating fuel and gasoline to 22 entities in a number of Bering Strait communities through the company's Consolidated Bulk Fuel Program. Program participants received 929,802 gallons of heating fuel for prices ranging from $4.02 to $4.84 per gallon and 287,926 gallons of unleaded gasoline for $4.02 to $4.83 per gallon, NSEDC reports. The company charges no interest on fuel cost loans to participants and no fees to administer the program.

This winter NSEDC also provided a $500 electricity subsidy for residential use to each head of household in the company's 15 member communities who signed up for the program. The subsidy is applied as a direct credit to electric utility accounts.

Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, social scientist at Kawerak Inc., will describe impacts of high fuel prices on subsistence practices and diets among Bering Strait residents April 8 during the 2009 Western Alaskan Interdisciplinary Science Conference and Forum in Nome. Her report is based on information gathered from 60 subsistence users in the region. The University of Alaska Northwest Campus and the Bering Strait Development Council will host the conference.

gold rush that established the town.

When this winter ends, the Nazarene Church will no longer host the emergency shelter. By the time the freezing temperatures return, NEST members hope to have a more permanent solution in place.

NEST was conceived in the fall of last year to address the issues of alcoholism and homelessness in Nome. Fuel was added to the fire when Lyle Okinello, a well-known individual in Nome, froze to death just off Front Street in early January.

A rushed shelter was put together for one night at the end of January at Nome Eskimo Community's facility. Concern over liability and the daunting task of taking on the issue alone stalled that effort after the first night. After that point, the members of NEST, who work for or represent several community organizations, stepped up their efforts.

Within weeks, the Nazarene Church was offered up as a space. Volunteers were lined up, a rough plan was formed and NEST established its name. By early March, it was decided that the first night the air temperature dropped to -10°F or if the wind chill measured -20°F, the NEST would open the doors to the church as a shelter from 10 p.m. to 7 a.m.

The temperature threshold was met for the first time March 5 and again the next night. Starting March 14, the conditions dictated the shelter be open every night until March 28. Each of those nights, the shelter has averaged 11 to 16 visitors, who are called "guests" here.

Business has been steady, which is a testament to both the previous lack of any sort of facility to shelter those who cannot provide it for themselves and the need for a more comprehensive program to address chronic homelessness in Nome. "This will show people that this is a need," said Linda Kimotoak, a NEST member who has volunteered and coordinated the shelter.

"There is definitely a consistent group," added Abby Huggins, another NEST member, volunteer and coordinator.

Many of the shelter guests end up there for reasons related to alcohol. Others, however, may simply be stuck in town en route to their village and not have the means to stay in a hotel nor do they know anyone in Nome. Guests have ranged in age from 25 to 60 years old. Men and women, Native and non-Native have all been guests.

Guests have come on their own accord. Others have been brought by family members. Some are dropped off by the police.

The 20 or so beds in the shelter line the walls of the hall and also form a line down the middle of the room. Yellow tape marks the area where three or four cots are reserved for women. Three or four stacks of cardboard boxes that hold blankets and bedding for the guests are lined up behind the table where the volunteers greet and sign in the guests for the evening. Each box bears a sticker with the name of a guest who has used the shelter before. Everyone gets their own covers and blanket.

A volunteer effort

The organization, staffing and supplying of the emergency shelter has been entirely a volunteer effort up to this point.

Approximately 40 people have volunteered to cover one of the two shifts each night monitoring the shelter. The shelter was open every night of the week as the Iditarod came to Nome, a week where most everyone in town is occupied well beyond their normal schedules. Even so, the NEST organizers said volunteers rallied to make sure the shelter was staffed.

Nome Nazarene Church Pastor Jeran Marchbanks said he even encountered some visitors to Nome who volunteered to help staff. "Some folks who came from New Zealand for Iditarod, and for them it was the highlight of their trip," he said.

The long, consistent run of nights of shelter openings had a multitude of effects for both those working and using the facility. "It definitely put some strain on volunteers and it motivated volunteers to come out of the woodwork," Marchbanks said. "We [also] built trust among shelter guests, that we're there."

Even with all the outpouring of support, NEST organizers say volunteers are still needed. The most critical need has been for those who can act as monitors, especially for the 2 a.m. to 7 a.m. shift. NEST organizers try to schedule volunteers for a maximum of two shifts a week, whether that be one full night at the shelter or shifts split over two different nights.

The monitors essentially make sure everything runs smooth at the shelter. They check guests in as they arrive, which is as simple as having the guest sign their name if they have been there before. For new guests, they review the rules and have them sign a few forms. Monitors also ensure the rules are followed, such as no alcohol on the premise.

All guests and monitors get tested for tuberculosis.

NEST organizers know that not all are comfortable with or have the time to volunteer as monitors. They also stress that there are other ways to help. Whether it is through the donation of food or cleaning supplies, or even a monetary donation. It costs the Nazarene Church more money to keep its hall heated at night.

Volunteers who are qualified to be third-party supervisors for people who are staying at the Seaside Center are also needed to direct crews to give the shelter a thorough cleaning.

Even something as simple as providing a hot meal to be served one night at the shelter goes a long way. "Throwing on a giant crock pot or making a soup, that's a huge gift," said Isaac Grody-Patinkin, a NEST organizer. "There's no expectation that it be there all the time."

In addition to individuals giving their time and energy to the shelter, a number of organizations have also participated. NEST organizers especially give credit to the public health department and laundry staff at Norton Sound Health Corp., the Nome Police Department, the Nome Community Center and the Nazarene Church, among others, for the support given. They also thank the guests for taking care of the shelter.

Accolades

The gratitude has also flowed back to the NEST organizers.

On Sunday morning as the eight guests awake and start gathering themselves for the day, the "thank yous" start percolating about the room. "I always have lots of 'thank yous,'" said NEST organizer Huggins.

Guests also show their appreciation by helping take care of the shelter and cleaning up before they leave. "Everybody's been real appreciative of what we've been doing. Everyone's been respectful," said Colin Long, an employee at Nome Eskimo Community and NEST volunteer.

In addition to the guests, the shelter has received accolades from the Nome Police Department. Those who are too intoxicated to care for themselves are often picked up by police officers and either taken to the emergency room or the jail. "From our perspective it's not acceptable [that people freeze to death]. We don't want that to happen to anybody," said Nome Police Chief Dallas Massie. "It really gives us an option if we can take them to the shelter."

That option also frees up the police to respond to other calls.

Massie said often an officer will drive such an individual all the way out to Anvil Mountain Correctional Center to place an intoxicated person in protective hold only to find that he or she is too intoxicated to be taken in after a blood alcohol content test is performed. The trip—or trips, there are often more than one a night—takes one of the department's limited officers out of service for other potential calls.

Those who end up in the emergency room can have the same effect on medical personnel, diverting their attention from others who may need help. "[The shelter] frees up the emergency room at the hospital for people with medical emergencies," Massie said. "All in all it's good for the community, it's good for everyone involved. I applaud it."

What comes next

NEST organizers have known from the start that this winter's emergency shelter was only a temporary fix. With that in mind, the group has also focused on a more long-term solution.

According to Melanie Edwards, who works for Kawerak and is part of NEST's long-term focus group, that effort is still just getting underway. "It's all in its infancy stage," she said. "We're brainstorming right now."

Ideally, NEST organizers say, a three-pronged approach will be achieved. As currently envisioned, those three components would consist of a sleep-off room, a hostel or shelter and a long-term treatment center.

The sleep-off box or room would simply be a bare-bones room where highly intoxicated people could sober up in a safe location. NEST organizers said the room could consist of little more than four walls, a floor drain and a pad on the floor—the idea being that it is not a desirable place to go, but safer than being left outside.

The shelter is envisioned as a place run by those who use it. A sort of hostel, guests would pay a small amount to stay there and would not be allowed to use the facility when intoxicated. The facility could contain services like showers and a washer and dryer.

Finally, a long-term treatment center is seen as necessary to help combat the problem that leads to homelessness. Such a center has been a long-standing goal for many organizations and agencies in Nome. NEST organizers realize that it will take a coordinated effort to allow such a center to be established here. With it members representing a broad array of organizations, members are hopeful they can make positive headway into establishing a long-term solution here in Nome.

Time to go

At 6 a.m. in the shelter the lights come on. On this particular morning, some eggs are boiled in addition to the breakfast bars that are normally available for guests. Coffee is brewed.

By 6:30 most everyone is up and moving. Guests fold their bedding and place it back in their box. Having all stayed here before, the guests know the routine. Cots are wiped down, disinfected and broken down. One guest grabs the vacuum cleaner and starts working on carpet. Almost everyone lends a hand. "They just have this real desire to contribute," Pastor Marchbanks said.

Other guests help wipe down the breakfast table and others give the bathrooms a quick cleaning.

By 7 a.m., the cots are all stored, the room is clean and the guests are all out the door to face the day. With the work to close the shelter for the day mostly accomplished by the guests, the volunteer monitors are out the door shortly after the guests.

On this particular Sunday morning the wind is still blowing strong, prompting those outside to turn their backs to the gusts to keep the driving snow out of their faces. Not long after 7 a.m. some of the previous night's guests can be seen pacing Front Street, presumably to keep warm. A half hour later a few have made their third lap of what is likely to be many more in a day that will largely be spent out in the cold.

Energy department awards funds for energy efficiency

On March 26 the U.S. Department of Energy announced more stimulus dollars flowing from the nation's capital to Alaska. Out of the $3.2 billion that the DoE releases nationwide to fund energy efficiency and conservation projects, $26 million are energy efficiency block grants "to support jobs, cut energy bills and increase energy independence" for Alaska. The State of Alaska was allocated $9,593,500, but Gov. Sarah Palin didn't include the money in her appropriations bill, which is in front of the Alaska Legislature now.

Cities and borough governments slated to get a piece of the $26 million pie are Anchorage with more than $2.6 million, Fairbanks with $164,000; Juneau with $131,400 and $50,000 each for the cities of Bethel, Kenai, Ketchikan, Kodiak, Palmer, Sitka and Wasilla. The Fairbanks North Star Borough scored $250,300, the Mat-Su Borough $249,300 and Kenai Peninsula Borough $192,200. The Denali, Haines, Ketchikan Gateway, North Slope and the Northwest Arctic boroughs will receive $50,000 each.

None of the money is slated to go directly to the City of Nome or any of the Bering Strait, Norton Sound region villages.

An additional $14 million were released by the Obama administration for a so-called "Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant program," funded by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. The program is slated to provide formula grants for projects that reduce total energy use and fossil fuel emissions, and improve energy efficiency and also includes transportation programs that conserve energy, projects to reduce and capture methane and other greenhouse gas emissions from landfills, renewable energy installations on government buildings, energy efficient traffic signals and street lights, deployment of combined heat and power and district heating and cooling systems.

Bering Straits Native Corp. will receive $35,400; King Island Native Community $48,000; Native Village of Brevig Mission, $43,500; Native Village of Buckland $48,800; Native Village of Council, $34,500; Native Village of Deering, $39,200; Native Village of Diomed, $35,600; Elim, $42,800; Gambell, $56,900; Koyuk, $44,400; Savoonga $56,600; St. Michael $46,800; Shaktoolik, $42,400; Shishmaref, $53,400; Teller, $43,500; Unalakleet, $57,500; Wales, $39,100; White Mountain, $40,700; Nome Eskimo Community, $101,800; and the Stebbins Community Association, $52,400.

Barrow receives environmental justice grant

Barrow was one of 40 communities nationwide to receive an environmental justice grant from the Environmental Protection Agency. The EPA is awarding $800,000 in grants to organizations working with communities facing environmental justice challenges throughout the country. The grants, topping out at $20,000, are to be used for community projects aimed at addressing environmental and public health issues. The grant for Barrow is intended to make sure that citizens of Barrow have a voice in the decision-making on local oil and gas development projects.

Alaska exports reach $3.6 billion in 2008

The U.S. Census Bureau last week released numbers of Alaska's export business, concluding that the value reached $3.6 billion, marking 2008 as the fourth best year for exports—but also it declined 11 percent compared to the previous year.

The largest export commodity was by far seafood, accounting for $1.8 billion or more than 50 percent of all exported products. Japan leads the list of Alaska's seafood importers, buying $553 million worth of the harvest of the sea. China spends $404 million, Korea $226 million, Germany $168 million and other countries $449 million on Alaska seafood.

Following seafood are mineral exports, which experienced a drop from $1.269 billion in 2007 to $691 million in 2008. Energy exports, including liquid natural gas, rose from $259 million to $501 million. Precious metals, gold, saw a slight rise from $132 million to $144 million in exports, mostly to Switzerland. Forest products account for $83 million and fishmeal brought in $28 million.

Alaska's top export partners are Japan ($1.1 billion), China ($733 million), Canada ($370 million), Korea ($366 million), Germany ($208 million) and Switzerland ($148 million).

School board, city officials team to examine costs

By Janet Ahmasuk

The March 24 Nome Board of Education meeting saw the teaming of a couple Nome Common Council members as the two groups examined ways to save money.

Board members present at the work session were President Gloria Karmun, Albert McComas, Barb Nickels and Betsy Brennan. Nome Common Council members attending were Mary Knodel and Randy Pomeranz.

During the hearing of delegations parents and audience members responded. Margaret Thomas gave an impassioned plea to continue the Physical Education Program. She cited various authorities, stating it improved student physical health, resulted in better classroom brain focus, less brain and physical fatigue, and curbs childhood obesity. She mentioned there is a need for structured physical activity as opposed to unstructured physical activity at the play ground and school yard.

It was learned that PE coordinator Jeff Collins' contract will be presented at the April regular meeting. Luthi mentioned that the money is in the budget for the PE position.

Parent Dana Handeland would just as soon see the true dollar amount of the school lunch program charged rather than what appears to her to be a subsidized amount, reflecting dollars taken from other programs, including education.

McComas would also like to see lunch costs closer to actual costs.

School district business manager Jenny Martens mentioned that school lunches are going up this year.

During the end of meeting, Nome Common Council member Knodel expressed interest in NPS being a soda-pop-free environment.

The work session agenda was discussion on the FY/10 budget and information on the federal stimulus package.

A wide range of issues hit the table during the FY/10 budget discussions:

Board member Brennan wanted to make sure that the science curriculum was not being cut out of the budget. She also asked Robin Johnson from the Technical Department how many carts were at NES and out at Beltz. The answer was three and two, respectively. She also found out from Johnson that the $32,000 spent on classroom computers were replacements for old and outdated computers.

The question was also asked about the impact of eliminating the Community Schools position.

Superintendent Luthi said grants may help by reallocating/negotiating with the Boys and Girls Club. Assistant Superintendent Jon Wehde is working on this issue at the state level, and there is no clear answer at this point.

Board members Nickels and Brennan had questions about passing the grant through the Nome Community Center, and whether this maneuver would cause less Boys and Girls Club activity. The answer is yes and/or changed.

Board member McComas also wondered if NPS could legally charge for the activities bus used for basketball games as a way to defray costs in that area.

Superintendent Luthi answered that "Yes we can charge for the bus."

Board President Karmun worried that the disadvantaged might not be able to pay the activities bus fare if that were to happen.

Business Manager Martens explained the school lunch program bookkeeping is better solved from the expenditure side instead of the revenue side. She also recommended closing down the outside freezer and cycling the other freezers back to four weeks.

Common Council member Knodel questioned changing the junior high counselor position to half time. Superintendent Luthi answered that the social worker will take up some of the counseling responsibilities and Principal Janeen Sullivan will also take on some of those tasks.

Brennan wondered at this point if we/NPS are spreading ourselves too thin.

McComas stated that NPS has been flat funded by the City of Nome for the last three years. He also mentioned that NPS needs to keep the co-operation advantages with Bering Strait School District in mind.

Nome Common Councilman Pomeranz brought up the Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Center (NACTEC) and wondered what NPS could negotiate or share with space or teachers/staff there.

At that point NPS Board Member Brennan asked if NACTEC had a skills counselor only to be told by Superintendent Luthi that the skills counselor had resigned. He, however, told Brennan to hold on to that thought.

Board members and others voiced concerns about the price of fuel.

As was learned in meetings previously, 85 percent of the e-rate technology budget will be reimbursed.

For the benefit of Nome Common Council members, the bookkeeping system whereby NPS saved money for capital projects was re-explained. Capital projects—meaning the fire alarm and boiler projects—have been on the agenda at previous board meetings. However, NPS still needs to worry about equipment purchases such as loaders that wear out.

Board member Brennan had a concern about the special education position beyond two years. She agreed that it is working now as it is, but wondered about later. For now, at least, she was told that NPS is looking to combine services or part-time contract services.

The maintenance staff will increase over the summer due to summer help for projects such as gym floor replacement and flooring and

Stan Lujan, who left the district after serving as superintendent for seven years. The board started advertising for Lujan's position approximately two months before hiring Luthi.

While many in the education field have solidified their job prospects by this time of year, Bruce Johnson of the Association of Alaska School Boards reassured the board Monday that they still have time. "It's not unusual for us to be hiring superintendents in late May or early June," Johnson told the board as he participated in the meeting via telephone.

Johnson will advise the board as it works through the process of selecting its next superintendent.

The job offering lists the salary at $95,000 per year with fringe benefits, such as housing and the use of a district vehicle. Karmun and the board concurred that the offering specify a contract of three years. "I'm interested in longevity," she said.

If no qualified candidates are determined by the local search, the board will be forced to turn its attention outside, a process that is more costly and time-consuming.

As for Luthi, he said his plans upon leaving Nome are not yet clear. He and his wife own a home in the Matanuska Valley where he last worked before coming to Nome. "I'm not sure what life is going to hold. We have a home in the Valley," he said. "I have no desire or intention to leave Alaska. I do hope to continue in the field of education in some capacity, though I'm not sure what role that will be."

Bergamaschi wins first ski title ski/biathlon championships

By Keith Conger

Asa Bergamaschi, a swift skier from White Mountain, burst on to the Western Region ski scene three years ago as the smallest junior high boy skier.

That year, as a fifth grader skiing in his first regional ski race, he stayed on the heels of a skier two years his elder. Bergamaschi finished just seconds behind the older skier, taking the runner-up honors in the race. In the two years following that race, the skier he had chased, Emerson Conger of Nome, would win two more ski titles, while Bergamaschi would begin a frustrating string of second place finishes.

Last Thursday, Bergamaschi, now an eighth grader, broke that string and delighted the large and loud crowd of hometown fans at the 31st annual Bering Strait School District Championships. Bergamaschi zipped around the familiar 5-kilometer ski course to earn that elusive first gold medal. His lightning fast time of 12 minutes, 53 seconds was a whopping 44 seconds ahead of eighth grader Shyler Johnson of Unalakleet. Johnson won the race last year.

Bergamaschi was equally impressive in the biathlon race on March 27, being the only racer to "shoot clean," by hitting all five targets on the rifle range. He was able to earn gold by outdistancing his Unalakleet rival for a second time. Johnson, who missed two shots, was forced to ski an equal number of time-consuming penalty laps. Bergamaschi's double gold performance would earn him the meet's highest honor of Skimeister, the award given to the outstanding performer for each age division.

Johnson's double silver medal performance, along with a fifth-place finish in the ski race by eighth grade teammate Chris Lockwood, and a fourth place finish by seventh grader Ben Currier in the biathlon were enough to ensure that the Unalakleet boys squad would take home a second consecutive junior high boys team trophy.

Another eighth grader, Tim Schmidt of Nome, earned double medals at the meet, beating Currier in the biathlon by one second. His two bronze finishes were his first medal performances. Thomas Amaktoolik and Kevin Ione from Golovin teamed up to take the third place trophy.

The junior high girls age division was easily the deepest and most competitive at the meet, featuring the return of all top 10 finishers from the 2008 meet. Precious Lincoln, an eighth grader from White Mountain, outdistanced her 29 competitors to win her second consecutive ski title. Lincoln's margin of victory was small, as she edged out Rosa Schmidt, a sixth grader from Nome, by a mere 11 seconds. Her result in the ski race helped Lincoln capture her second consecutive Skimeister award.

For the second year in a row, the powerhouse junior high girls squad from Unalakleet captured the team trophy. The Unalakleet girls needed someone to step up, as seventh grader Jonisha Wilson, the team's top skier, injured her knee in a fall on day one, and did not finish the ski race.

Unalakleet seventh grader Season Haugen turned out to be the girl responding to that call. Haugen, who was one of only five girls at the meet to shoot clean, won the biathlon race and earned her first-ever gold medal. Teammate Katie Daniels, a seventh grader, took the bronze medal in the biathlon to help the Unalakleet girl's cause.

The most surprising result from the meet was provided by Nome's Ariana Horner, a seventh grader whose previous best finish was 10th place. Horner shot clean in the biathlon, which led to an identical time as Lincoln's, and helped her tie for silver, the first medal of her young ski career. She also posted the fifth best finish in the ski race the day before.

Horner used Rosa Schmidt's ski finish and teammate Miranda Murphy's fifth place finish in the biathlon to guide her squad to the second place team trophy. Nome's best finish ever in the junior high girl's age group. Teammate Hannah Tozier, a seventh grader and a first-year skier, finished 10th in the ski race, and ninth in the biathlon, to distinguish the Nome girls as the only junior high team with four top-10 finishers.

High school results

Conger, now a sophomore, blazed the 10-kilometer high school course in 23 minutes, 9 seconds to capture his fourth straight regional ski title. That victory would lead to his third consecutive Skimeister Award as well. Conger's margin of victory in the ski race was 5 1/2 minutes over his nearest competitor, teammate and Nome freshman Brendan Wehde. Wehde followed Bergamaschi's lead by moving up a notch on the podium. Wehde earned his first silver medal after a string of recent bronze-medal finishes.

The most improved member of Nome's high school boys squad, sophomore Sam Schmidt, took 12 minutes off his previous best time to earn the bronze medal. Nome's medal sweep in the ski race, coupled with Conger and Wehde's gold and silver medals in the biathlon race the next day would help the Nome boys retain the high school boys team trophy. The team from St. Michael, lead by Alex Otten, and the team from Shishmaref, led by Zander Weyiouanna, took second and third place, respectively. Otten won the bronze in the biathlon.

Freshman Caitlin Tozier of Nome, also a first-year skier, won both of her races to earn the title of high school girl Skimeister. She led all the Nome skiers in earning the coveted Sportsmanship Award.

carpeting projects.

Board members came up with some creative suggestions to reduce costs of student travel. It was mentioned that the regional basketball tournament is in Unalaska next year, which is an added expense. Scholarships, local donations and shifting expenses were mentioned.

The Extension School contract needs to be re-evaluated to see if the NPS can include elementary students next year.

Superintendent Luthi brought a letter to the meeting that he had drafted to Gov. Sarah Palin to reconsider the $170 million in education federal stimulus funds that she had rejected. The money won't be going to programs we can't sustain, he said, but will be spent to keep existing programs going.

Board Member Nickels added that she wants the words "strongly recommend and dollar amount" in the letter.

Brennan thanked Knodel and Pomeranz for attending the work session meeting.

McComas asked if NPS had ever had an energy audit for the elementary school. He agreed with a comment that some stimulus money could be used to replace loose and drafty window at the elementary.

Nome's Callahan named coach of the year

Story and photos by Jason Evans

After a basketball season that almost saw the Nanook boys go all the way, a few players and their coach are now soaking up some honors.

Nome teammates Jesse Blandford and Jeremy Head were named to the 3A Boys All State Team by the Anchorage Daily News/Alaska Media. Nanooks Head Coach Patrick Callahan was named 3A Boys Coach of the Year.

The Nanooks finished first for the second year in a row in the 3A Boys Western Conference and second in the 3A Boys State Championship.

Callahan has coached the boys team for the past six years. He grew up in Cordova and later in Seward, both 3A schools outside of Nome's region. When asked why he moved to Nome, he said, "I wanted to live somewhere, where taking my kids to McDonalds was a big deal, like it was for me growing up."

Callahan teaches history half time and activities the other half. He is raising three kids of his own in Nome and is also taking care of two foster children, both 2 years old, one from Gambell and one from Wales.

"He is a really, really good coach; he seem to get the most out of his kids. He works as hard as any coach out there, and commits so much time to the kids and studies the game. He does everything you are supposed to do to prepare your team," said Craig McConnell, a Kotzebue boys varsity coach for 11 seasons.

Blandford, a 5' 11" senior at Nome-Beltz High School has played for the Nanooks varsity team for the past four years. "Jesse is a good kid, as a referee we really get to know the Nome players, but also many of other kids in our region, and Jesse is one of the best. We also see good players acting badly, and Jesse never talks bad to his teammates or to the referees. He is a hard working young man," said Nome referee Bobby Evans.

Blandford led the Nanooks in scoring, averaging 23 points per game this past season. "I remember watching Blandford when he was an eighth grader," McConnell added. "I got to thinking about all the great Nanooks in the years past and thought he would be in the top 10. He is so well rounded, he could hurt you in so many ways, he does everything, he passes, scores, rebounds, plays defense, pushes the ball up the floor. He is so smart, he is just such a smart player, and those kids are so rare."

Head, a 6' 1" junior at Nome-Beltz has played for the Nanooks for the past three years. Head was the second highest scoring player on the Nanooks, averaging 16.9 points per game and led the Nanooks in rebounding. "Jeremy plays harder than anyone else, and that's what other coaches around the state would say," Callahan said.

"Jeremy could easily play college basketball and he is going to be really good for Nome next year. He will be one of the best players in the state," McConnell said.

"Jesse and Jeremy represent everything that a coach would want in their players; they are hard working, polite young men who are the ultimate competitors," said Unalaska boys basketball coach Jim Wilson.

Kevin McHenry, head coach for North Pole added, "Both are excellent basketball players but even better teammates from what I can tell. That is a huge part of a team's success; leadership by example. Congratulations to Jesse and Jeremy, but also the entire Nome team for their accomplishments."

When asking coaches around the state what they thought about Callahan and Blandford and Head, many had great things to say. They also lauded the entire Nanook team. "The Nanooks boys were a pleasure to watch, and their attitudes were really appreciated. It didn't matter what situation they were in, they were really a pleasure to watch, big time" said Steve Ivanoff, former boys basketball coach from Unalakleet.

A lot of credit was given to Mason

Evans, a junior and a starting point guard for the Nanooks. "Mason Evans should have been on the honorable mention list" Callahan said.

"While Jesse and Jeremy have produced lofty statistics night in and night out, I think Mason Evans is an unsung hero, as one of the best point guards in the state, at any level. I know that Jesse and Jeremy would quickly credit him for delivering the ball when and where it needs to be on a nightly basis," said North Pole coach Kevin McHenry.

"The other players on that team really complement their two stars well. Nome has a well rounded team with the Wongittilins and Mason Evans. Mason does a great job of running the offence and is a great leader on the floor," said McConnell.

"I am very happy for all of the Nome kids and the coaching staff, their hard work has paid dividends this season. Nome must be very proud as well. Pat Callahan has created a special basketball program that is very well respected all over the state of Alaska," said Ketchikan boys basketball coach Eric Stockhausen.

Golovin's Copenhaver named top 1A girls basketball coach

Western Alaska players given All-State honors

Golovin girl's coach Jason Copenhaver was selected as the Coach of the year in the Alaska Newspapers Inc. State 1A Basketball year end awards.

Copenhaver led his six-girl team to two upset victories in the conference tournament and a first-round win at state before losing the semi-final game to Akiachak. The Lynx outplayed the team from the Kuskokwim after the second quarter, but couldn't recover from an extremely slow start. Copenhaver edged the coach of state champion Wainwright for the award.

The Bering Strait School District was also well represented among players led by senior Matt Takak (Elim) and spark plug Sheralyn Sockpealuk (Golovin), who were both named to the Second Team All-State. Unalakleet's Joanne Semaken, John Ivanoff and Pete Katongan all were named to the 2A Third Team. Koyuk's Michelle Kavairlook and Molly Nassuk joined George Okbaok (Teller), Swenson Tocktoo (Brevig Mission) and Darrell Takak (Golovin) on the 1A 3rd Team. Additionally, Kira Eckenweiler (Unalakleet), Billi Miller (Golovin), Oscar Takak Jr. (Elim) and James Barr (Shishmaref) were named to their respective Honorable Mention lists.

The All-State Teams were sponsored by Alaska Newspapers Inc. and voted on by a statewide group of coaches, Activities Directors and media. Players and coaches from all teams in the 1A and 2A classifications were eligible for nominations.

HOROSCOPES

April 2 - 8, 2009

 CAPRICORN December 22 - January 19 Yahoo, Capricorn. You finally find the impetus to break out of your relationship rut this week. An employment opportunity may be too good to pass up.	 ARIES March 21 - April 19 Look within, Aries, and find the courage to forgive another. They truly are sorry, even though they haven't said so. This is one relationship you don't want to lose.	 CANCER June 22 - July 22 Mix it up at a party, Cancer, and you might just learn a thing or two. Communication dwindles at work. It's up to you to step in and play the link between parties.	 LIBRA September 23 - October 22 Talk is cheap these days at work. Pay no heed to the chatter around you, Libra. The answer to your dilemma is right in front of you. A mix-up at home strikes your funny bone.
 AQUARIUS January 20 - February 18 Your assumption about someone is correct, but don't pry too much, Aquarius, or you could end with more than you bargained for. Hope rises with a note.	 TAURUS April 20 - May 20 Cheer up, Taurus. All is not lost at home. Continue your efforts, and life will be rosy again. Time to tie up loose ends at work and get out of dodge for a while.	 LEO July 23 - August 22 Listen up, Leo. Your pride is getting in the way of a special relationship. Stop putting off what needs to be done. A financial mistake turns out in your favor.	 SCORPIO October 23 - November 21 Your wish for more me time is granted. ### Award Winners

The Nome Nugget is proud to announce that Tyler Rhodes was awarded a first place in the Alaska Press Club competition for best sustained coverage with stories of the Rock Creek Mine. His stories connected global problems to a local crisis, while putting a human face on the ongoing story. Diana Haecker also won a first place award sports story for “Back to Back Mack Attack” where she tells the inside story of how Lance Mackey really won the 2008 Iditarod. It was a nicely crafted tale that was fun to read. She also won a second place award for a photo of Lance Mackey and his dogs.

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor David Elmore
Nome Community United Methodist Church
for the Nome Ministerial Association

“It’s Never too Late”

God first appeared to Abram when he was 75 and told him to gather up his things and leave Haran; and Abram was a youthful 86 when God again appeared to him and told him that his descendants would be numerous, but would also be of “his very own issue.” And now yet again, God appears to Abram at the age of 99 and reminds him of this promise once again. Abram and Sarai’s response was not that much different than our own reactions might be. Indicating the apparent ridiculousness of this promise, God commanded that the name of this child would be Isaac — laughter.

This passage stands in stark contrast to the portrayals of the New Testament. Jesus was only about 30 when he began his ministry. Mary and Joseph were young — Joseph was still an apprentice, and Mary was what today we would consider just a child. In this week’s passage, we examine Genesis 17 where Abram and Sarai still had confidence in the promises that God made in the covenant with them — and scholars believe this portion of Genesis was not finalized until the Babylonian exile, a time when the Israelites had no land.

The point is this: God never gave up on Abram. God kept calling and calling out to Abram, until Abram finally responded and left his home in Haran. And God kept reaching out to Abram, just as God reaches out with us over and over. And even when Abram lost faith and committed a momentary act of indiscretion with Hagar, God kept reaching out to Abram (later known as Abraham), and even reiterated the promise that Abraham’s descendants would be many nations, and that his true heir would be of his own issue. And as further proof of God’s continuing to reach out, God promised that Hagar’s descendants through Ishmael would be numerous and prosper as well.

Just as God never gave up on Abram, God never gives up on us. And so, it is never too late for us to respond to God’s grace in our lives. No matter how we’ve failed to be aware of God’s presence in our lives, no matter how often we may have chosen not to listen to God’s voice calling out to us, it is never too late for us to respond. No matter our age, our health, our physical condition, God can still use us in ways that we have yet to imagine. During this time of Lent, when we are preparing for Christ to come among us once again, we should be sensitive to observe God’s presence among us in many ways — from neighbors providing unexpected hospitality, to young kids helping the pastor shovel the walkways to church. We should listen this Lenten season as God speaks to us in that still small voice.

Over 12 years ago you went home. Tears have been shed and God has been faithful in wiping them away as he promised. I just wanted to share this picture with all who shared in the ministry with him from whom all things come. We don’t say goodbye “just see you later.” Thank you all for supporting him, and Mom, you can weep a little and I can say “I love you!”

Congratulations David!

Over 30 years ago you were born. This is VPSO Dave Slwooko born to the late Janet Slwooko enjoying dried fish years ago at the Unalakleet Covenant Church Parsonage. Just wanted to share it with you all at Koyuk. Our Native people need a lot of support these days.

Life experience counts.

Helping others can be a career.

The experience of raising my kids and volunteering in the community prepared me for the human services field.

Now I encourage the potential of people experiencing developmental disabilities. My career is a joy and very fulfilling for me.

Trooper Beat

On March 17, Nome AST received an anonymous tip that Casey Iyakitan, 26, of Gambell, was on local airline flying home to Gambell with alcohol. VPO Robert Apatiki and VPO Rudy Oozevasuk contacted Iyakitan and removed four 750ml bottles of alcohol from his luggage. Charges will be referred to Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals.

On March 18, at approximately 3:00 p.m., AST received information that Frank Kavairlook, 29, of Koyuk, was intoxicated in violation of his conditions of probation. Investigation determined that Kavairlook was intoxicated and a summons was requested.

Between March 18 and March 21, Alaska Wildlife Troopers from Nome and Kotzebue conducted a patrol of the crabbing activities in the Nome / Norton Sound area. As a result of the patrol, nine pots were seized and several violations were discovered. Those issued citations were Johnnie Noyakuk, of Nome, for Employing Unlicensed Crewmembers and Commercially Fishing With Unmarked Pot(s); Robert Noyakuk and Isaac Ozenna, both of Nome, for Commercially Fishing Without a Crewmembers License; James Nguyen, of Nome, for No Biodegradable Escape Mechanism on five subsistence pots; Charles Reader, of Nome, for Failure to Properly Mark Subsistence Pots; and Robin Thomas, of Nome, for Commercially Fishing With Unmarked Pot(s).

On March 21, Nome AST received a report that someone had attempted to break into the Stebbins Post Office. A suspect has been identified and the investigation is continuing.

On March 21, Nome Alaska Bureau of Alcohol and Drug Enforcement contacted Serena Toolie, 21, of Savoonga, at a local air carrier in Nome. Incident to contact, one 750ml bottle of alcohol was removed from her luggage. Charges will be forwarded to Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals.

On March 22, at approximately 8:56 a.m., Nome AST received a report that Yvonne Pete, 18, of Stebbins, was walking on foot from the village of St. Michael to Stebbins and become disoriented and lost. A hasty team was authorized and Pete was located in good condition.

On March 22, at 11:51 a.m., the AST received a report of alcohol importation at a Nome airline terminal. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Kellen Katcheak, 25, of Stebbins, for Probation Violation. Katcheak was remanded to AMCC.

On March 22, Unalakleet AST received a report of a probation violation occurring in Stebbins on March 19. AST is continuing to investigate and will forward the information to the Nome Adult Probation officer.

On March 23, at 1:30 a.m., VPSO John Peratrovich received a report of an intoxicated person passed out in a Gambell residence. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Sharla Aningayou, 26, of Gambell, for Probation Violation. Aningayou was remanded to the AMCC.

On March 23, at 6:00 a.m., VPSO John Peratrovich received a report of a domestic disturbance in Gambell. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Garrett Oozevasuk, 28, of Gambell, for Assault IV. Oozevasuk was remanded to AMCC.

On March 23, at 4:00 p.m., VPSO David Sliwoko received a report of an assault in a Koyuk residence. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Matthew Hadley, 25, of Koyuk, for assaulting his girlfriend. Hadley was remanded to AMCC.

On March 24, Unalakleet AST learned of a possible assault in St. Michael. Initial information provided to AST was very limited. AST is continuing to investigate the incident surrounding the reported information. Alcohol was involved.

On March 25, VPSO Lucas Stotts in Shaktoolik received reports of stolen fuel oil from fuel tanks at a couple residences. Investigation is continuing.

On March 26, at approximately 8:00 a.m., VPSO Gerald Otto in Elim contacted and arrested Wade Daniels, 27, of Elim, on an outstanding Nome court arrest warrant for failure to appear. Daniels was transported and remanded at AMCC without incident.

corporation in this area in charge of handing out money has had its funding removed by 90 percent.

You and your corporation are no different. You want to maintain ignorance and addiction so you can maintain control for your self and your family members. This behavior is world wide with every tribal organization. The children remain abused and impoverished while a few adults steal wealth for themselves.

I have $6 million in grants ready for the villages of the BSSD School district starting in 2010 for this program, but you refuse to support it for 2009 so we can survive until the congressional funds kick in. You have insulted many important people in the State and National association that have pledged money and time to your children, and the Korean University that pledged long-term time and expense on behalf of the children of this region for over five years to all 15 villages with future funding for fellowship grants, higher education and also cultural grants for Native dance groups to Korea. The money it would take to support our efforts and a state tournament for 300 children who have been granted the state tournament for the first time in history, is very small compared to your huge wasteful expenditures, regardless of your weak corporate standard line. This is a once in a lifetime opportunity for your communities and children and it will not return ever again in history. Korea and others are horrified that you would not care about your own children and communities.

The Bering Straits Tae Kwon Do program amounts to the complete change of students' testing and graduation levels in the villages schools and going on to higher education so they can replace the current outside people running the schools and school district. It would also substantially reduce poverty in the villages, but that would also mean being smart enough to question BSNC board decisions, policies and investments? Gee, I guess you don't want that, do you?

The letters talk of children who have never before taken part in any activity and now have a vision of wanting to do better in school and helping at home with their chores. They talk of hope for the future. They talk of going to school to take part in Tae Kwon Do training (even in bad storms) for the hope of becoming something they had not had an opportunity to have before. These are not just 5 or 6 kids on a basketball team, but as many as 50 to 190 per village. This amounts to 30-40 percent of the population in some villages. Our previous programs proved that 5-10 percent of the population could have substantial impact on academic, behavior health, health care and law enforcement costs in the villages.

I have people from as far away as California coming to support the tournament and children here, but I have to go through the embarrassment of telling them no, it is shut down due to selfish people that represent these communities. I have been threatened to keep quiet and considered it until the mail delivered the hand written letters of the children and parents.

I have watched for years since the early 90s— people with money and power come into this area with millions of dollars to help kids in this area. I was offered $1.5 million to help the kids of the 15 villages if I would go and complete a pilot project for two villages. We told Norton Sound it would cost $70,000 to do that and we were given $3,000. I raised another $15,000 on my own and we were successful. I gave up my job, lived in a Connex without heat and water, on food stamps and when I got back to Nome the CEO had quite thrown up his hands in disgust. The person in charge of the NSHC division to fund grants for the villages was so insecure to spend the funds on hand, they had to give back $350,000 that year to the grant agencies. Hank and I went bankrupt. For years I have watched other people come here and leave in 3 to 6 months thinking they were unable to cope with the culture, but in fact they were smarter than I (who has wasted 14 years of work to get to this point on behalf of this region). I continue to get emails from important people nationally that think they can write letters to the BSNC and its division corporate leaders to help, but I have told them they cannot change thousands of years of culture and corruption.

I am officially going to have the congressional office cancel the grants and shut down the entire project. I doubt that my family will continue to even stay in Nome. I have many other areas that have asked for me to teach and assist them with non-profit programs for children. This is just one more sad story of the people and children who have the least being used by those who have the most.

I may be beaten, but I will release these letters and your story to every state, national and international news media outlet I can to show you for what you are and how you abuse these children and communities. People are very upset over AIG and their bonuses; it is nothing compared to what you do to your own people. Sincerely, Master Dan Scholten Nome, Alaska 99762

Obituary

Daniel Sinakok Iyatunguk

Daniel Sinakok Iyatunguk was born October 9, 1932 at Shishmaref, Alaska to Frank and Florence Iyatunguk. He died March 20 at home sitting next to the one he loved most.

Daniel and Florence Iyatunguk were married on July 17, 1972. They had six children, four girls and two boys; Pauline, Esther, Nora, Verne, Gilford and Inez.

Daniel was the youngest of ten children. When he was two years old his family moved to Deering, and he attended the Deering School up until the fifth grade.

As a youth during the summer at Deering, Daniel started working at the corral owned by his brother-in-through parachute training and jumped off a plane once a day.

Daniel sang and played in a group with his older brother Laban Iyatunguk, who played the guitar, long time friends Wilbur Karmun, the accordion, Jimmy Knox, tub-bass, and Frank Tiepelman, the mandolin.

Daniel and Florence were known for horn doll carving. Daniel learned from his father-in-law, Sergie Obruk, and brothers-in-law Tommy and Delbert Obruk.

Daniel was a past member of the Deering and Shishmaref IRA Councils, Shishmaref Lutheran Church Council, Mayor on the Shishmaref City Council, and most recently was the chairman of the Elders Committee. He honored serving the community and was willing to help anyone when they needed help, especially when someone was in need of prayers.

Daniel is survived by his loving wife Florence; daughters Pauline-Matthew, Elsie, Sharla, Dylon, Kelsi, Esther-Mamie, Daniel, Vivian, Aaron, Nora—companion Timothy Nayokpuk-Kenny, Corben and Inez; sons Verne-companion Jessie Hadley-Colten, and Gilford Iyatunguk. He also considered Sharon F. Nayokpuk, Frances "Alook" Eutuk, and Sandi Keller as his daughters. He is also survived by his brother Laban and Irene Iyatunguk Sr.; brothers-in-law Stewart Davis, Winfred, Delbert, and Tommy and Vivian Obruk; sisters-in-law Grace and John Pullock, and Lucy Obruk and numerous nieces, nephews and grandchildren.

Daniel was preceded in death by his father Frank Iyatunguk, mother Florence Iyatunguk, step-father (who he called Dad) Johnny Taft; brothers Robert, Rudolph and Frank Iyatunguk Jr.; sisters Bertha Iyatunguk, Alice Karmun, Gladys Iyatunguk, Emma Davis, Dorothy and Clarence Bartholomew and an infant sibling; nieces Rebecca Olanna, Elsa Adams, Florence and Gwendolyn Iyatunguk and Johanna Hickerson; nephews Bobby and Roger Iyatunguk, Paul Nickolson, Kevin Pullock; father- and mother-in-law Sergie and Esther Obruk.

law, Edward Karmun, who was married to his older sister Alice. He would go seining for fish in the river.

Daniel joined the Army in his early twenties and received his GED. He went to Basic Training at Fort Rich for six months. He was drafted in 1957, traveled to Germany and was stationed there for two years from 1957 to 1959. While he was there he and Elmer Avessuk went

Breakers Thank You

By Cussy Kauer

And so, Iditarod XXXVII passes into history, as I listen to John Handeland at the banquet announcing the awards for this year's race. Who would have thought some 84 years after our diphtheria epidemic Nome would be commemorating that event, and one young cancer survivor would capture our hearts and our respect as he marks his place in Alaskan racing history as a dog mushing legend. The honor is yours, Lance Mackey, for another stunning achievement.

I would like to take this time to thank and recognize the efforts of those who contributed to our own entertainment and events held during Iditarod week at the Breakers Bar. George Halas, K & L Distributors, hosted our kick-off party with gifts and goodies from sponsors Jack Daniels and Alaskan Amber. A gentleman from Kenai, Jeff Sutton, won the prized pool cue. Melissa Ford co-hosted the party with George, and with her quick wit and Kelly Blevins superior service, the pace was set for the days to come. We had lucky leprechauns and Irish O'Nomes St. Patrick's Day, with lots of green boppers and necklaces to go around. Monica Rose did a wonderful job MC-ing and refereeing both the men's and women's arm wrestling contests. Winners of the 2009 contests are as follows in order of first, second or third place: Men's heavyweight: Doug Buchanan and John Nieves (draw for 1st place), Joe Federman. Men's middleweight: Donny Gun, David Morgan, Dan Ahmasuk. Men's lightweight: Lance Mackey, Dale Ellanna, Jessie Ripley. Women's heavyweight: Heidi Kenny, Tamra Reynolds, Ruby Booshu. Women's middleweight: Kristy Berington, Maggie Stang, Sara Okleasik. Women's light weight: Stacey Smith, Dora Ahwinona, Brandy Adams. Monica's husband Joel helped with the weigh-ins and other logistics, and Kevin Albert, Odom Corporation, assisted keeping brackets and provided trophies and t-shirts which advertise the contest. The shirts are sharp looking, and we have a few left for sale if anyone is interested. Don Hansen, Northland Services, contributed toward the prizes, and donated hats and vests which were used in the next evening's foos ball tournament. Weezer Walcott put together the second annual tourney which was well attended, and other prizes were provided by K & L Distributors. One old hula gal introduced Breakers beauties, as they mushed their way across Bering Strait, bringing fresh pineapple from Sledge Island. Our Wiggly Jigglys served up the fresh fruit, beach hats and flower lei's, and gave a special performance to crowd favorite Wipe Out. Adorned in flower headpieces, coconut bras and grass skirts, Melissa Ford, Jennifer Ford, Dan Ahmasuk, Krysta Kauer and Kelly Blevins wow'd us with their dance. Cowboys brought cowgirls to Friday evening's Husky Hoe Down, donning straw hats, sheriff badges and bandanas, and special striped tiger hats for the law! We crooned to the tunes of Toby Keith as we hoisted our glass, belting out the words to "I Love this Bar." Thank heaven Benny Piscoya helped me pack and set up for cooking Saturday's meal of corned beef and cabbage provided in support of the Lions Club's Elliot Staples Golf Classic, the worlds most northern. It was the wee hours of the morning, and I was running out of gas. Tony Burdick, Patrice Shook and Krysta Kauer kept all the golfers and friends happy with a nice, good hot meal when they finished out on the Bering Sea ice course. Our mixologists Cherie Liston, Liz Duncan, and two of our newest stars, Tony Villegas and Benny Piscoya, fantastically worked above and beyond, and kept everyone in their refreshment of choice. In addition to serving, Benny was the perfect protector and guard at the entry, welcoming all and passing out lighted necklaces and trinkets. These two young men earned the notch they have now carved on their Iditarod belt buckle, as they ran in stride behind the plank with Melissa and Kelly and Jennifer and Cherie. Early every morning as this old building sat silent and waiting, our janitor/building maintenance specialist, David O'Connor, cleaned up after all of us, kept our coolers full and our paper dispensers at the ready. I would be remiss if I didn't recognize our Nome patrons and friends who support the Breakers all year long. Thank you for bringing in your Iditarod guests, and we hope they enjoyed their Nome adventure in your favorite place.

There are a lot of moving parts to Iditarod week at the Breakers Bar, and the staff continues to amaze me, as we are tasked with the extraordinary job of serving extraordinary crowds. We go out of our way to provide good, clean, entertaining fun. With watchful eyes, and on our toes, keeping all our patrons safe and happy, Iditarod or not, is what we do best. I couldn't be prouder to work with, along side of, and in support of each and every co-worker. When you see them, tell them what a great job they are doing! They are Cherie Liston, Kelly Blevins, Liz Duncan, Weez Walcott, Tony Burdick, Melissa Ford, Tony Villegas, Patrice Shook, Jennifer Ford, Benny Piscoya, Krysta Kauer, Jackie Olanna, Barb Fagerstrom and David O'Connor. I know how Lance must feel about his team. Team Breakers dug in and lined out, reaching down deep, synchronized and smooth, like they are every day of the week.

Winter winds still whisper Iditarod, but in a flurry of far flung dog booties and the blowing snow and exhaust of jet engines, Iditarod XXXVII is now committed to memory. We look forward to longer, spring days, Stagger Lee's crab feed, and the arrival of our snow bird Susan McClintock. We have made many new friends, and I got to see two old friends over coffee one day...Rudy Demoski and Kenney Chase. Thirty some years ago when these two handsome devils raced, it was willow bush to willow bush, no assistance with the high tech GPS tracking and other navigational aides now in use to find your way across Alaska! Ah, yes, memories, it's what fun and friends are for. Stop in and see us. We're at the Breakers, in Nome.

More stimulus funds headed for Norton Sound Health Corp.

In addition to the $152 million it will receive for a new hospital, Norton Sound Health Corp. is in line for another $180,000 through the federal stimulus package.

Members of Alaska’s congressional delegation announced Friday that $3.6 million would be flowing to the state to expand services at 26 community health centers statewide. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services announced that $338 million would be available nationwide for community health center service expansion under the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, or stimulus law.

Health centers deliver preventive and primary care services to patients regardless of their ability to pay; charges for services are set according to income. Health centers served more than 16 million patients in 2007, about 40 percent of whom had no health insurance, according to HHS.

Messages left with administrators at Norton Sound Health Corp. asking how the funds would be used were not returned by press time.

The Department of Health and Human Services estimated that, statewide, the funds would result in 87 new or retained jobs and affect an estimated 16,629 new patients and 7,446 new uninsured patients.

Workshops

Retrofit of Existing Homes for Improved Energy Efficiency
Monday, April 6 • 6:30p-9:30p • Pioneer Hall
Learn about weatherization and how to retrofit windows, walls, and roofs from Richard Seifert, UAF energy and housing specialist. Free. Includes manual. To register, call 443-2320.

Environmental Health Care Toolkit: Promoting Environmental Health & Justice
Tuesday, April 7 • 2:20p-4p • Pioneer Hall
Learn about a toolkit designed to help health aides diagnose, treat and prevent health problems linked to contaminants. Presented by Alaska Community Action on Toxics.

Applied Fisheries and Marine Research in the Bering Strait
Tuesday, April 7 • 2:40p-5p • Northwest Campus
Heidi Herter, Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program, will lead a discussion to identify regional fisheries and marine research priorities and improve interagency collaboration.

Science Education for Rural Alaska
Wednesday, April 8 • 4p-5p • Northwest Campus
Learn about programs and curriculum development for science education in rural Alaska. Ray Barnhardt, director of UAF's Center for Cross-Cultural Studies, will discuss a new PhD program in indigenous studies, and other advanced graduate study opportunities in science fields applicable to Alaska Native issues and rural contexts.

Reindeer Meat-Cutting Workshop
Wednesday, April 8 • 6p-9p • Nome Eskimo Community Trigg Hall
Learn to get the most from a reindeer carcass with this workshop from Greg Finstad, range ecologist and Reindeer Research Program director. Limited to 25. Register at 443-2201.

Roundtable: Bering Strait Research Consortium
Wednesday, April 8 • 7p-9p • Pioneer Hall
Our region needs a central forum to convey cultural, health, economic, and scientific research to the public, and to facilitate data exchange, research synthesis, and research support. Representatives of local and statewide organizations will discuss the organization, mission, and planning of the Bering Strait Research Consortium.

COASST Seabird Monitoring Workshop
Saturday, April 11 • 9a-4p • Northwest Campus
The University of Washington is expanding its seabird monitoring program to our region. Learn to collect data on beach-cast carcasses of marine birds to help address marine conservation issues. To register, call (206) 221-6893, or email info@coasst.org.

Fuel tanks run dry in Teller

Teller Native Corp. looks to AVEC for help

By Tyler Rhodes

Teller resident Susan Omiak is scared to see her next electric bill.

"It's going to be outrageous. It's going to be big," she said. With her heating fuel tank empty and western Alaska still caught in the grip of a cold winter, Omiak has had to rely on three small electric heaters to keep her house warm for nearly two weeks. "We're just getting by with electric heaters," she said.

It's likely Omiak is not alone in her predicament. As of Monday,

Council caps Chinook bycatch at 60,000 fish

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fisheries Management Council unanimously decided Monday night to cap the number of Chinook salmon the rich Bering Sea pollock fishery can catch at 60,000 fish annually beginning in 2011.

If the bycatch cap is reached, the fishery will cease. The action was

Church bankruptcy plan decried by sexual abuse victims

KNOM, Pilgrim Hot Springs on the block as security for financing or sale

By Diana Haecker

A reorganization plan submitted by the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska to the U.S. Federal Bankruptcy court last week shook up victims of clergy child sexual abuse as well as leaving employees of church-owned organizations like Nome's radio station KNOM second-guessing what the future may bring.

According to the 87-page disclosure statement filed with the 80-page reorganization plan, CBNA hopes that sales or financing of its real estate holdings would generate $8.6 million to go into the fund to pay out victims of clergy sexual abuse.

The plan proposes to refinance or sell real estate and an airplane hangar CBNA owns in Fairbanks, raffle off an airplane and conduct fundraisers.

However, the plan does not include liquidation of endowments or the schools, because they "are either restricted by the donor or essential to the mission and ministry of the Diocese," according to a press release announcing the reorganization plan.

The victims' lawyers already decried the plan as unworkable, adding to the uncertainty of the future of Nome's radio station KNOM and the Pilgrim Hot Springs property owned by CBNA.

The diocese filed for bankruptcy protection in March 2008 when faced with over 140 claims of child sexual abuse at the hands of Catholic priests and lay workers employed by the

Fairbanks Diocese. As part of the

Net metering snares no utility support

By Sandra L. Medearis

A lukewarm measure in the Legislature to require Alaska's electric utilities to provide net metering and cost savings for alternative energy producers came up big time at a recent Nome Joint Utility System board meeting when a Nome consumer asked the board what they planned to do to put the shine on the heavy investment in alternative energy he has a twirling over his house.

First, what is net metering again? That is a plan by which individuals and businesses have an opportunity to realize financial benefits from installing renewable energy systems—mostly likely solar collection and wind generation in Nome. Money off electric costs could come from selling excess renewable electrical power back to NJUS or receiving a credit on light bills. That means a customer's meter could spin backward and forward during the same month, depending on generosity of wind and sun as well as level of consumption; the customer would get a bill for the net power used: net metering.

Just getting a break on his bill sounds good, Jim Adams told the board. Adams has invested in excess of $20,000 in his alternative system to help offset high energy costs where heating fuel is just under $6 per gallon and electricity has a high cost per kilowatt plus a tacked-on fuel surcharge.

"I didn't start this thing to make any money from it. What I don't use goes back to the grid. I don't care what you do with it as long as I get credit," Adams

Letters

To the editor,

Head of the Alaskan Republican Party Randy Ruedrich and Gov. Sarah Palin have called for Sen. Mark Begich to step down and for Alaska to hold a special election to fill the Senate seat he currently holds. Such statements are ridiculously partisan at best and ultimately destructive at worst.

Whether the prosecution bungled the case or not, enough evidence existed to indict Sen. Ted Stevens for doing something illegal. Mark Begich was ahead in the polls long before there were any indictments against Stevens, and he has done a great job since being elected, working in a bipartisan manner whenever possible.

Sen. Stevens did many things for the state of Alaska, but Alaska voters decided it was time for him to retire. Upon announcement of his guilty verdict, Gov. Palin said "The verdict shines a light on the corrupting influence of the big oil service company that was allowed to control too much of our state. It was part of the culture of corruption I was elected to fight. And that fight must always move forward regardless of party or seniority or even past service." "I'm confident Senator Stevens will do what's right for the people of Alaska." (Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, Oct. 27, 2008) I fear the same cannot be said for the Governor and Republican Party Chairman.

Sincerely,
Dinah Jelinek

Fairbanks
Dear Editor,

I am writing in support of Sen. Mark Begich. I am encouraged by the job that our former mayor is doing and believe he was and is clearly the better candidate to represent our state. Sen. Begich has worked across party lines to bring support to the state of Alaska and

Sour Grapes (Again)

Isn't it ridiculous? Don't ya just want to laugh? Or maybe cry? What a bunch of grasping at straws crybabies we have in the Alaska Republican Party. Now that the Obama administration's Justice Department has dropped the charges against Sen. Ted Stevens on a technicality, the Alaska Republicans are riding to Stevens' defense on their mighty white chargers. It was the Bush (a Republican, lest we forget) administration's Justice Department that brought (and bungled) charges against Stevens. President Bush refused to pardon Stevens. Remember how Governor and former Vice Presidential candidate Sarah Palin refused to ride to Stevens' defense and made statements about fighting corruption? Now we hear a different tune, "Oh, woe is we. Let's have a new fair election."

Oh, give us a break, Sarah. You ought to know better. Does the Alaska Republican Party realize how desperate and foolish they sound? What a bunch of sore losers. They should get on with it. Sen. Mark Begich won his election fair and square. He is doing a good job. There is no reason to have a special election. Then there is the issue of Palin's blatant refusal to appoint the Democrats' pick for the replacement for a Democratic seat for Juneau. She ignored the suggested replacement and appointed a Republican who pretends to be a Democrat. The Republicans ought to be ashamed of themselves for being such sore losers.

When Alaskans hear such mean-spirited partisan political desperation and tomfoolery, it makes those of us who are rational thinking folks sit back and have a huge belly laugh. It seems we have a whole vineyard of sour grapes growing in the backyard of the governor's mansion.

In 1899 there were no laws in place to enable Nome to operate as a city which could collect taxes and provide services to its citizens. In order to address the issues of sanitation, law enforcement and fire protection, the people of Nome organized a consent form of government in September 1899. The miners' candidate, Ted Cashel, was elected mayor. Since this form of government had no real authority, the people of Nome lost respect for it as the winter wore on. Little tax was collected and criminals ignored the police.

Attorney Hume had lost the election to Cashel. Mr. Hubbard from the law firm of Hubbard, Beeman and Hume traveled to Washington, D.C., in the fall of 1899. This was also the Nome law firm that represented one of the Spoilers, Alexander McKenzie. His work resulted in the June 6, 1900 Act of Congress enabling, among other things, the formation of municipalities in Alaska.

The newly appointed federal judge, Arthur Noyes, arrived in Nome on July 19, 1900. His cohort Alexander McKenzie was the court appointed receiver who set about the work of illegally taking over the rich

U.S. attorney general dismisses charges against Ted Stevens

After allegations of prosecutorial misconduct in the trial against former US Senator Ted Stevens solidified, Eric Holder, U.S. attorney general last Wednesday dropped the case. The prosecution team failed to turn over notes to Stevens’ lawyers as required by law. "After careful review, I have concluded that certain information should have been provided to the defense for use at trial," Holder said in a statement. "In light of this conclusion, and in consideration of the totality of the circumstances of this particular case, I have determined that it is in the interest of justice to dismiss the indictment and not proceed with a new trial."

U.S. District Court Judge Emmett Sullivan set an April 7 hearing on the motion to dismiss the case.

Stevens was tried and found guilty of seven counts of failing to disclose gifts and services from former oil field company VECO boss Bill Allen on his Senate disclosure forms. In reactions to the dismissal, Stevens issued a short statement, saying, “I am grateful that the new team of responsible prosecutors at the Department of Justice has acknowledged that I did not receive a fair trial and has dismissed all the charges against me... I always knew that there would be a day when the cloud that surrounded me would be removed. That day has finally come.”

U.S. and State of Alaska sue
BP over 2006 oil spill

The Alaska Department of Law and the US Justice Department filed civil lawsuits against BP on March 31, relating to the March and August 2006 crude oil pipeline spills at Prudhoe Bay. Corroded pipelines were to blame for both spills, resulting in the release of an estimated 212,252 gallons of crude oil in March and was the more than 900 gallons in August.

The state’s lawsuit seeks compensation for nearly two years of lost revenue due to the reduced oil production and penalties for violations of environmental laws.

The US Justice Department filed a civil complaint against BP Exploration Inc. on behalf of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Transportation, alleging that BP violated the spill prevention measures of the Clean Water Act and violated the Clean Air Act by improperly removing asbestos from its pipelines.

The lawsuit asks the court to order BP to take all appropriate action to prevent spills in the future, including systematically inspecting its pipelines and associated facilities for corrosion. BP pleaded guilty on Nov. 29, 2007, to one count of criminal negligent discharge of oil to the waters of the United States in violation of the Clean Water Act.

NOAA sued over failing to list ribbon seals as endangered

The Center for Biological Diversity and Greenpeace last week notified the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration of their intent to file suit against NOAA for denying protections under the Endangered Species Act for the ribbon seal. The Center contends that the ribbon seal, an ice-dependent species of the Bering, Chukchi, and Okhotsk seas off Alaska and Russia, is threatened by global warming and the consequent loss of its sea-ice habitat.

NOAA concluded in response to a legal petition to list ribbon seals as endangered, that they aren’t because sufficient sea ice would remain in the seal’s habitat for the species to survive at least until mid-century.

The Center has also filed petitions to list three other ice seal species – the ringed, bearded and spotted seals–to the endangered species list. NOAA is required to make a determination by May 28. The polar bear was listed as a threatened species in May 2008, and the Pacific walrus is currently under review for listing as well.

Secretary of Interior to visit
Dillingham

An important visitor will descend on Dillingham next week as U.S. Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar is scheduled to hold a town hall meeting there on Monday, April 13. U.S Senator Mark Begich will accompany Salazar to Dillingham. “I am very pleased Secretary Salazar has agreed to go to Dillingham to get more information and the perspective of rural Alaska on many issues important to our state,” Begich said. “I know the secretary’s time is limited and Alaskans are fortunate he is able to spend two days listening to our views as our country looks at the future of energy resources.” Salazar is hosting a series of regional public meetings including in Anchorage, Atlantic City and New Orleans to gather information and public comment to help build a comprehensive energy strategy for the Outer Continental Shelf.

• Net metering

told the board March 31. "All I am trying to do is cut my costs." He said based on monitoring his Skystream wind generator so far, he didn't think was going to bring electric costs down to zero.

The aspect of net-metering looming has local and statewide utility administrators, well, scared. But they concede without relief in the cost of generation and hefty fuel surcharges—not likely—that net metering or some equitable consideration for alternative energy is inevitable. Forty-two other states and Washington, D.C., already have laws requiring utilities to credit or buy back homemade energy. What if many ratepayers started generating their own power and resulting revenue losses left NJUS without means to cover fixed standby and investment costs? they ask. The power companies might have to raise rates on conventional power sales to pick up the slack. That would come out of the pockets of those who could least afford it, they say.

That could happen, Carl Emmons said, when the alternative energy systems become efficient and cost effective.

"It works fine as long as a few people are doing it. As these get more reliable, the utility will have to raise rates to be able to buy the power," he said.

Board member Fred Moody just votes "no."

"No one in this world is going to convince me you should buy electricity for less than I do just because you go out and buy an alternative energy system," he said. "Net-metering is just a deferred cost of fuel. Why should you pay 10 cents when I pay 31 cents?"

NJUS has to pay for power plant operators, fuel, office staff, linemen and the like to keep power at ready when the sun doesn't shine on photovoltaic cells and the wind doesn't turn turbines, Moody added. "Only people it's going to hurt are people with no money for [wind generators and solar panels] or no room for them."

And another thing, Emmons said: the Banner Wind farm above Nome probably costs the utility money when it was feeding back into the grid because "it drives the load of the engine down so it's less efficient, so we are not getting the maximum kWh per gallon of fuel."

Alternative energy producers who favor net metering say the practice makes sense, but there are other ways to go to disconnect automatically while the wind and sun are strong. They say programs limited to small systems would not impact the utilities. They argue that there are benefits for the utility with one meter going both ways as the utility would not have keep separate accounts for customer-generated electricity. Generally, according to the federal Department of Energy, net metering customers do not generate more electricity than they use during billing periods, meaning they just pay a reduced bill.

Also, net metering users monitor energy use and keep consumption beneath what they generate.

In some states where net metering has been adopted—Pennsylvania, for example—the law allows utilities to avoid passing unpaid fixed costs to regular customers by having small business or industrial alternative energy producers pay a share of such stranded costs via an annual recovery fee when they have saved 10 percent or more on their light bill compared to the previous year via net metering.

Board members conceded they needed to work something out to make it right with alternative energy producers, but having the state require net metering was not a good idea at all. Emmons conceded the board needs to study alternatives. Not to worry—for now. The utility companies, including Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, have persuaded the Legislature to shelve SB 66. House Bill 33, still in the hopper, appears to be dead this session.

"My guess is nothing's going to happen," said alternative energy crusader Jim Stimpfle Monday.

"At some point we are going to have to make ourselves as intelligent as possible [about alternative energy systems]," Emmons said. "It is coming whether we like it or not."

Could be. Nome's early adopters of solar and wind energy take on a glow when they talk about the accomplishments of their wind or solar outfits. "My water was 151 degrees last night, and my boiler didn't turn on once," a delighted Mitch Erickson reported at Airport Pizza one evening last week. Erickson has an array of solar tubes—metal rods enclosed in vacuum cylinders he figures cost him around $7,000. He is counting on them to supplement his purchased power from April until about October while Nome's latitude enjoys sunlight.

While an energy meeting or demonstration is likely to draw at least 40 with plans for energy innovation, only four or five people in Nome have installations so far.

Meanwhile, NJUS is seeking money to implement its own wind farm under its jurisdiction and has received $4 million from the state renewable energy fund against a request for $16 million for wind energy development. The utility's manager, John H. Handeland, told the board staff he was working with engineers to see if a more modest project would be submitted to Alaska Energy Administration and what other financing options were available. Additionally, NJUS has an attorney working out a power purchase agreement with Banner Wind, a wind generation company owned by Sitnasuak and Bering Strait Native corporations.

Wind energy projects are in progress in six surrounding villages: Brevig Mission, St. Michael, Shaktoolik, Savoonga, Wales and Unalakleet.

• Chinook cap

driven by a steep rise in numbers of Chinook salmon incidentally taken as bycatch that began in 2002 in the pollock fishery and totaled nearly 122,000 fish in 2007. Bycatch numbers declined steeply in 2008 and 2009.

Chinook salmon are a prohibited species in the pollock fishery. When they are taken as bycatch they must be counted but cannot be retained, and most of them are returned dead to the sea. That deeply disturbs residents of western Alaska who have faced drastically reduced returns of Chinook salmon to their rivers in this decade.

The program adopted by the council includes complex and untried industry incentive plans to reduce Chinook salmon bycatch to or below 47,591 fish annually. The plans include rewards for participating pollock fishermen who avoid Chinook salmon bycatch and penalties for those who don't. An opt-out provision is provided for pollock harvesters who choose not to participate in an incentive plan, but they are subject to low annual backstop bycatch cap of 28,496 Chinook salmon. Chinook salmon taken under the backstop cap are counted against the 60,000-fish cap.

The council's unanimous approval of a plan to manage Chinook bycatch in the pollock fishery belies conflicting views of the plan's merit among the 11 voting members of the body.

"It is very difficult for me to accept this package," said council chair Eric Olson, an Alaska Native and salmon fisherman from Dillingham. "It pushes the envelope." His comments reflected those of many individuals and groups representing communities and organizations in the Yukon River, Bristol Bay and Norton Sound regions who recommended simple bycatch hard caps as low as 30,000 Chinook salmon in written and oral testimony.

"The performance standard is the piece that helps me support [the plan]," Olson said. The council included in the plan a performance standard based on "annual scenario 2," which calls for an overall bycatch cap level of 47,591 Chinook salmon.

The performance standard stipulates: "Each sector will be annually evaluated against a performance standard. If the sector's annual Chinook salmon bycatch exceeds the sector's portion of the annual scenario-2 cap level in any three years within a consecutive seven-year period; all vessels within that sector will operate under annual scenario-2 in all subsequent years. Any vessel or CDQ group that fishes under the opt-out backstop pool will not be evaluated or included in annual calculations of a sector's performance standard."

The council heard in-person public testimony on the Chinook bycatch issue from about 200 individuals last weekend and Monday morning, about half of whom represented the Coastal Villages Region Fund, one of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Program that receive annual allocations of Bering Sea pollock. Speakers from CVRF's 20 member communities in the Kuskokwin region emphasized economic benefits that royalties from pollock harvests and investments have brought to their villages and said they are able to meet their needs for traditional subsistence foods.

• Teller

Teller residents had not been able to purchase heating oil in town for at least two weeks.

As has happened in previous years, the community's heating fuel tanks have run dry. "We just don't have the capacity to sustain the village all winter long," said Tanya Ablowaluk, general manager of Teller Native Corp., the entity now managing the community's tank farm.

That doesn't mean there is no heating fuel at all in town. Both the school and the city's electric provider, Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, have remaining supplies. AVEC has enough that it can spare a stopgap supply of 3,000 gallons to ease the situation for Teller residents. The infusion could be supplied as early as this week.

For that to happen, however, AVEC President and Chief Executive Officer Meera Kohler said the state needed to open the door. "We're constrained by our policies, so we have to have some sort of local emergency declared," Kohler said.

The state did its part Monday, clearing the way for action. A letter from Division of Community and Regional Affairs Director Tara Jollie landed on Kohler's desk Tuesday requesting that AVEC offer assistance if possible.

The situation is a tricky one for AVEC. Kohler said the electric provider should be able to spare the 3,000 gallons of fuel and have enough to last it until the next barge arrives in the summer. However, she does not want the cooperative, which supplies power to 53 villages in interior and western Alaska, to be seen as a fallback supply line for villages. "We are not in the fuel supply business. We don't want to compete with the local barge companies," she said. "We are not licensed to do that. Our fuel is not designated for that."

Kohler said AVEC is prepared to provide the 3,000 gallons at its cost plus storage costs. She said the price should come close to the $6.75 that was being charged for the fuel in the community tank farm. "Hopefully it would be a pretty comparable number," she said.

On Monday, Isaac Okleasik, president of Teller Native Corp., was hopeful that the transfer would be able to take place on Wednesday. It was still to be determined Monday just how the fuel would be transferred from AVEC's facilities to the Teller tank farm. "Another thing holding us up is the actual transfer from their tank to ours," Ablowaluk said.

Meanwhile, many in Teller have been travelling the approximately seven miles west over the ice and along the coast to purchase heating oil in Brevig Mission. Brevig Native Store manager Elmer Kakaruk said he sells heating oil for $7. That's 25 cents more per gallon than the fuel was selling in Teller when it had some in its tanks. The cost of the oil is even more when you consider the gas used to get there and back by four-wheeler or snowmachine. Gasoline, which is still in supply, sells for $6.45 a gallon in Teller.

Kakaruk said he figures his supply of heating oil could withstand the extra pressure from Teller for a few weeks. That pressure could even help make room for what is expected to be cheaper fuel when deliveries are made by barge this summer. "I will be able to hold up until they get a transfer hose. I'm trying to sell my excess so I won't be stuck with that $7 fuel when the new fuel comes in June or July," he said.

Most communities in western Alaska that filled their tanks last summer paid for fuel at the worst possible moment, when oil prices worldwide had spiked to all-time highs. With fuel prices currently well below that high mark and expected to still be cheaper come summer, those holding that high-priced inventory are anxious to clear it out to make more room for cheaper fuel.

Just because heating oil has been available in Brevig Mission hasn't meant everyone in need in Teller has been able to go and get it. Omiak said her four-wheeler has remained parked with a dead battery. The situation has forced her to make some hard choices. A small stockpile of frozen fish lost out in one of those decisions. "I unplugged my freezer so I can run my heaters," she said. "I'm down to my last four bags of fish, so I'll just do without the fish and use the electric heater."

Relying so heavily on electric heaters has also made her nervous. "It's kind of scary, sometimes. I don't think these houses were made for the amount of electricity it takes to keep these heaters going," she said. Omiak said she's been told that the wiring in her house could pose a fire hazard. She has had some repairs made, but still is not comfortable with the amount of power the heaters are drawing.

Before the tanks ran dry, Teller Native Corp. Manager Ablowaluk said the corporation tried to warn as many people as they could that supplies were running low. "Before we ran out we tried to contact the majority of the community to let them know we are running low and to come get your fuel now so nobody would be running out," she said.

Corporation President Okleasik said once more fuel is obtained, deliveries will first be made to those houses that are completely out of fuel. He said 60 houses in Teller rely on the fuel as well as various businesses and organizations.

Demand continually outpaces supply

It appears that dry fuel tanks are almost a perennial problem in Teller.

Okleasik said that approximately a dozen years ago there was another fuel distribution business in town run by the Blodgett family. Back then, between the private business and the city tanks, which were managed by the Teller Traditional Council and then the City of Teller before this year, there was enough fuel to make it through the winter. The fuel supply business closed down, and Ablowaluk said its tanks are now storage tanks for AVEC.

Some years, Okleasik said a fuel supplier from Nome has driven to Teller before the road is snowed over to top off the tanks. That additional fuel, he said, only seems to give the community an extra month before the tanks run dry.

The village tank farm can hold approximately 28,000 gallons of heating oil and 26,000 gallons of gasoline. Okleasik estimates an additional storage capacity of 10,000 to 20,000 gallons would allow the community to maintain a fuel supply between summer barge shipments. "We've got to get more tanks," Okleasik said.

Okleasik is hoping that within five years an expansion of the tank farm could become a reality. "We've got to fill out a grant. We got our tank farm through the Denali Commission. Hopefully we'll get somebody to do a grant and do a phase two," he said.

Once the highway between Teller and Nome is clear and dry, fuel could again be delivered by truck. With the heavy snows experienced this winter, it's unlikely that the road will be passable any time soon. In any case, by the time the road is dried out to that extent, Okleasik said most households are using very little oil.

Even so, Okleasik says favorable weather will help. "We're looking forward to a nice warm spring," he said.

By then, hopefully, Omiak's house will again be nice and toasty with her electric heaters stored in the closet. "It's hard living up here. Especially with no heat; it makes it harder," she said.

bankruptcy proceedings, a definitive numbers of sex abuse victims needed to be established and a wide call to come forward if sexually abused by Catholic clergy was answered by more victims as their number rose to 294 after a Dec. 2, 2008 deadline. An avalanche of claims hit the diocese following a settlement reached with Elsie Boudreau in 2003 who first filed a civil suit against James Poole, CBNA and the Jesuits for having been sexually abused by Poole in Nome.

KNOM looking for non-profit

According to court documents, CBNA wants to “transfer” KNOM radio station to a non-profit entity—which has yet to be formed—for $380,000. “Under the plan, a newly formed non-profit corporation will acquire the assets of KNOM in exchange for $255,000 cash at closing plus $125,000 paid in three annual installments due on December 15, 2009,” reads the document.

KNOM’s founding father was Rev. James Poole, ironically also one of the worst sex offenders among the 14 lay workers and priests accused of child sex abuse in Alaska, who brought the station on air in 1971.

According to the station’s general manager, Ric Schmidt, the formation of a non-profit entity would be desirable but is nothing but a thought put on paper right now. “In the best-case scenario, a non-profit, non-commercial entity ruled by a board of directors would take over and let us continue our work,” Schmidt said. He added that CBNA owns the property and buildings, but KNOM is funded by donors in the Lower 48 and overseas. Just to put a price tag on the property is nearly impossible as the buildings are wired and built for the purpose of a radio station and it would be useless for any other use, said Schmidt. He added that it would be impossible for a commercial radio station to come in and take over.

Operating costs are sky high—Schmidt said, the electricity bill alone is $11,000 a month—and not enough income could be generated by advertisers.

The worst-case scenario, Schmidt said, would be if KNOM is liquidated, shut down and taken off the air.

“How do I feel about it?”

“It’s a rough ride,” he said. “We’ve been rocked by the news for four years now, but we have to remain focused on our mission and to serve our listeners. My main concern is for our listeners, the people we serve and our staff who work so hard to do the best job for the community they can.” According to Schmidt, KNOM’s staff is comprised of four full-time and two part-time employees, as well as four full-time and eight part-time volunteers.

Geothermal proposed for Pilgrim Hot Springs

With high energy prices slamming rural Alaska, the potential of geothermal development has made the hot springs oasis look attractive for more than just potato growing.

While the plan calls for “development, use lease or sale of the Pilgrim Hot Springs property,” CBNA business administrator Tom Buzek told The Nome Nugget that the intent is to tap its geothermal potential. “We’re not really looking to sell Pilgrim Hot Springs but to find a partner to develop a geothermal power plant.” Buzek envisions a green project that would benefit Nome with cheap and renewable power. Court documents say that CBNA is presently soliciting bids from interested parties to pay a minimum up front fee of $1 million followed by annual payments “in an amount to be determined.”

Buzek said that the amount slated for the victims’ fund from Pilgrim Hot Springs is $3 million. The plan says that if there are no proceeds from the sale or use of the Pilgrim property five years after the effective date of an approved reorganization plan, the property is slated to be sold “and the proceeds, net of all costs of sale, will be paid to the Fund up to the amount of the Pilgrim Springs Property Allocation [or $3 million, Ed.], the balance will be retained by the reorganized debtor.” Buzek explained that this gives the diocese time to pursue grants to further study the water flow and the feasibility of developing the property as a geothermal power source for Nome. Buzek last week attended a geothermal conference in San Francisco and said, “I met a lot of interested people and folks who could potentially be partners. But for now, I can’t mention names, they need to pencil out things on their end.” A big component to determine its feasibility also lies in the cost of transmitting power to the consumer in Nome.

In an e-mail to The Nome Nugget, Nome Joint Utility System manager John Handeland wrote that the rough cost of building a power transmission line to Pilgrim Hot Springs would run upward of $250,000 per mile. In comparison, he wrote, the Rock Creek Mine transmission line was over eight miles long and cost more than $3 million, including switchgear. “This was all good ground, no drilling required, and only small sections underground. I’d go no lower than the $250K/mile, and expect it would be more. Jack up the price a little more based on lost time due to crew travel back and forth every day,” Handeland wrote.

Victims outraged by plan

In a first reaction to the bankruptcy plan, lawyers for clergy sexual abuse victims are crying foul over the plan, saying it is not specific enough in dollar amounts, it doesn’t put the diocese’s millions in trusts and endowments on the table, and that it does not actively pursue a source where the real money is: the diocese’s insurance companies. “They unilaterally propose an unworkable plan,” said Anchorage attorney Ken Roosa, who represents 240 of the 292 Alaska sex abuse victims. Roosa said in a phone interview with The Nome Nugget that the plan offers no pastoral outreach, bullies the victims and that he disagrees with the tiered system of classifying the level of abuse to come up with compensation categories.

The bankruptcy plan proposes a tier system, the level of abuse suffered and gives the victims a choice to either use money out of a litigation fund—meaning that a victim has to present his or her case in court, and a judge or jury decides on how much should be paid out in compensation, explained CBNA bankruptcy lawyer Kasey Nye in a phone interview from Tucson, Ariz. Or the victim chooses the settlement fund, where according to the level of abuse, a special arbitrator will evaluate the settlement amount, said Nye.

Jim Stang, a Los Angeles attorney representing the committee of victims in the bankruptcy proceedings sent out a press release criticizing the tier system. “Victims are also put into compensation ‘categories’ in the plan, which do not account for the damage done to the child or consult with any supporting psychological or other scientific evidence,” Stang’s statement said.

“These victims, who have fought so long and hard for justice, need this settlement to pay for therapy, treatment and services to help them heal,” Stang said. “To add insult to injury, there is no pastoral outreach and no abuse prevention plan. How do we tell these victims that nothing has changed?”

Roosa vowed to advise his clients to vote “no” on the plan. As part of the bankruptcy proceedings, the creditors, in this case the abuse victims, get to vote on the plan before it gets final approval by the bankruptcy court. Stang said that the plan is a publicity stunt. “Our victims’ committee gladly gave them an extension once and would have gladly granted another one if the diocese had simply asked,” Stang said. “Instead, they chose to act unilaterally and posture for the public, rather than work cooperatively and make real efforts toward compromise and resolution.”

In the plan’s defense, CBNA’s lawyer Kasey Nye said that the plan and especially the tier system is just an initial proposal. “We fully intent to listen to the committee and how we could make it work,” Nye said. He added that a system of tiers exists throughout the U.S. and that the vast majority of the Alaska cases ended up in the highest tier for the greatest degree of abuse.

The 10,000-pound gorilla in the ring is not necessarily the diocese’s assets but its insurance companies who dodged their obligation to pay. Nye said that four insurance carriers—Continental Inc., Alaska National, Catholic Mutual and Etna—provided general liability insurance to the diocese at various times. In court paper work, the potential payout from these insurers is quoted to be as much as $27 million. During the phone interview with The Nome Nugget, Nye, however, said there is a possibility that Continental alone could owe $40 million. “Continental disputes their obligation,” explained Nye. “They say they have records that CBNA paid its premiums, but that they couldn’t find the policy in their paperwork that spells out the terms of the insurance.”

According to Nye, CBNA was insured with Continental from October 1971 until April 1979.

The bankruptcy judge Donald MacDonald had ordered the parties—the diocese, the claimants and the insurance carriers—to the mediation table in Seattle. William Bettinelli, a retired judge from California, who brokered the settlement between the Jesuits and its claimants, and Frank Kurtz, a sitting bankruptcy judge from Washington, are the mediators tasked to find a way to settle.

In the long run...

Hewitt races to Nome on foot for fourth time

By Tyler Rhodes

Shortly after midnight Friday, Tim Hewitt of Pennsylvania walked under a makeshift arch created by the outstretched arms of a handful of Nomeites.

It was the end of an incredible journey started more than 25 days earlier on the frozen surface of Knik Lake. Hewitt, a competitor in the 2009 Iditarod Trail Invitational, completed the 1,100-mile Iditarod Trail for an astounding fourth time. And just as he had the previous three times, Hewitt made the journey on foot.

Along with nearly 50 other hardy souls on skis, bikes and foot, Hewitt started the race March 1. Hewitt and eight others, however, stood out from the majority of the 47 competitors who were "only" attempting to race the 350 miles to McGrath. Only 28 would make it to McGrath and, from there, only four would attempt to continue to Nome. Keeping with the "survival of the fittest" philosophy, only two would ultimately walk down Front Street with more than 1,000 miles behind them.

The other competitor to finish the full course from Knik Lake to Nome, Italian Marco Berni, completed his journey around 3 a.m. April 1. Berni's arrival was perhaps even less ceremonious than Hewitt's. Tired and cold, the Italian was escorted at 4:30 a.m. by Nome Police to the emergency shelter set up at the Nazarene Church. Berni was reportedly able to later connect with a local bed and breakfast where he was finally able to put his feet up for some extended rest.

Hewitt's finish in 25 days, nine hours and 29 minutes set a race record time for traveling the Iditarod Trail's southern route on foot. As a comparison, it took this year's red lantern musher in the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race 15 1/2 days to complete the route. The invitational racers hit the trail one week before the Iditarod's start.

That head start meant nearly all the invitational racers plodded through the deep snows surrounding Rainy Pass before any Iditarod musher came through—or the additional trail-breaking that would precede them. Conditions there were so bad that the first bikers through had to take turns wallowing through the waist-deep snow while pushing their bikes. They would take turns breaking trail in a 16-hour push that proceeded at times at the snail's pace of a tenth of a mile per hour.

The wallowing ended just outside of Rohn. With the deep snow largely behind them once they departed McGrath, those journeying to Nome would soon encounter a new foe—the wind.

Hewitt said the battering winds began on the Yukon River. They really didn't stop all the way to Nome.

Hewitt said as he approached the Yukon village of Grayling, the headwind was so fierce that he felt as if it was going to deny him entry into the village.

The battle continued on to the coast.

Across Norton Bay between Shaktoolik and Koyuk, a section of trail where the violent gusts and blowing snow stalled more than a few mushers and teams in the sled dog race, Hewitt simply put his head down and pushed on. In a post on the invitational's website, that leg of the journey was described as the "toughest thing he has ever done." That phrase takes on added weight when considering he's now walked to Nome four times in the winter.

Through Topkok and Solomon the gales were strong enough to lift the 50-pound sled Hewitt was pulling right off the ground. He said it would hover behind him in the wind as if it were levitating. Hewitt said the wind flipped the sled hundreds of times, spinning him around like a weather vane. At one point through Topkok, the wind ripped Hewitt's goggles right from his face, never to be seen again.

While one might envision bunny boots or other bulky, cold-weather footwear for a race that traverses deep snow, overflow and temperatures dipping to -30 F, Hewitt finished the race in an over-sized pair of running shoes. He would wear several pairs of socks to keep his feet warm. Competitors' feet often swell in the race. As that phenomenon occurred with Hewitt, he would simply lose a layer of socks to maintain a comfortable fit in his shoes.

Those shoes were often strapped to a pair of snowshoes, devices he was forced to wear for hundreds of miles this year. In his previous races, Hewitt said the snowshoes came on for just a fraction of the time spent in them this year.

While his reddened face showed the effects of nearly a month spent out in the brutal elements that make up an Alaska winter, Hewitt reported no frostbite from the trip.

After completing what he summed up as his most difficult race yet, while still in town, Hewitt sounded doubtful that he would be back for another stab at the full race to Nome any time soon. However, along with the T-shirt, the satisfaction of finishing and setting a record, as the winner of the race to Nome, he also receives a free entry into next year's invitational.

It appears that with a few days of reflection, Hewitt couldn't turn down the offer. According to the Iditarod Trail Invitational website, he's already signed up for the 2010 race. Although it looks like he'll be taking a bit easier on himself, he's signed up for the 350-miler to McGrath.

Viveiros screams to Archie Ferguson/Willie Goodwin win

Nome racers make a strong showing in Kotzebue's annual snowmachine race

By Tyler Rhodes

KOTZEBUE—If you measured the reward versus the time on the course it took to earn it, hometown racer Silvano "Pookie" Viveiros made a killing Saturday at Kotzebue's Archie Ferguson/Willie Goodwin Sr. Memorial Snowmachine Race.

With a total payout of $10,250 for winning the overall race and his class, Viveiros netted nearly $3,900 an hour for the two hours, 38 minutes and 7 seconds he spent racing.

Viveiros' finish was nearly 1:30 faster than second-place racer Tre West from Nome. Both were racing Arctic Cat F6 machines in the B-Class.

While waiting for the trophies to be handed out at Kotzebue's Bayside Restaurant, Viveiros reflected on the race. "After they told me I was in the lead, I rode a little more cautiously," he said. "But there really wasn't much difference." The racers were started in 10-second intervals, meaning the first machine and rider across the finish line weren't necessarily the winners.

The racer who started approximately one minute after Viveiros, West, was working his hardest to close that gap. West, the winner of this year's Nome-Golovin race, said the course was alternately smooth and rough. Another 20 miles of rough, West said, and he probably could have overtaken Viveiros. On smooth ground, he said, the Kotzebue racer just had more top end.

Viveiros figured between Selawik and Noorvik he was hitting between 110 and 111 mph. "I spent more time in the air than on the ground," he said.

The fastest three racers of the day were all in the B-Class, which covered liquid-cooled machines up to 600cc, with Kotzebue's Jared Walker taking third with a time of 2:43:30. Just a bit slower, but winning the A-Class which featured the bigger machines, was Nome's Mike Morgan who covered the course in 2:43:33. The A-Class top three was rounded out by Norman Sheldon and Charlie Riley Jr., both of Selawik.

In the fan-cooled C-Class, which featured racers solely from Kotzebue, Roandy Toshavik, Tommy Jones and Wally Carter Sr. placed first through third, respectively. Toshavik also won the C-Class last year.

A total of 65 racers lined up on the sea ice in front of Kotzebue on the cold and clear Saturday morning to race the more than 200 miles from Kotzebue to Selawik passing through Noorvik and Kiana, before its return to Kotzebue. Nearly half of those who started would scratch before the race was over.

The majority of racers hailed from Kotzebue and surrounding villages, however, Nome competitors also made a strong showing.

Nome's Morgan is no stranger to the race. He was in the hunt last year when he ran out of fuel just outside of Noorvik. This year, with a first-place trophy in hand, he had no complaints. "I was looking for a little redemption, I guess," Morgan said.

Morgan has had a strong season, placing a highly respectable fifth place for his first run in the Iron Dog with teammate Tyler Huntington of Fairbanks. He was knocked out of the Nome-Golovin race this year when he blew a pipe.

Other Nome racers marking strong finishes included Jason West, who finished fourth in the B-Class. Reese Madden, who reportedly was able to cross the finish line for the first time without having crashed, took sixth place in the B-Class. Gerald Hughes, who reported some troubles with getting his fuel out on the course, finished ninth in the B-Class. Jade Greene took 15th.

Nome racer Joe Fullwood was out in front of the pack early in the race when a piece of his exhaust pipe broke loose and fell into his track. The broken piece pinched between the tunnel and the track, stripping out the studs and tearing the track. He was able to limp the machine into Noorvik, but his race was already over.

Nome's Buddy Okleasik also had to scratch when the connection to his reserve gas tank failed causing his machine to run out of gas on the course.

Besides handsome stacks of cash, the top three placers in each race class took home trophies that will likely stand out against the others on the mantle. Crafted by Drake Construction in Kotzebue, the awards were more metal sculpture than trophy as they were crafted out of miscellaneous snowmachine parts fused together.

Overall winner: Silvano Viveiros, $2,000.

READY TO RUN (above)—Two of Terry Streeper's dogs strain against their harnesses in the starting chute Saturday during the second day of the Arctic Circle Championships in Kotzebue. Streeper, of Fort Nelson, British Columbia, and his team won each day's race and the overall event.

Sprint mushers dash for cash at Arctic Circle Championships

KOTZEBUE—In the midst of the longer Kobuk 440 Sled Dog Race and the noisier Archie Ferguson/Willie Goodwin Memorial Snowmachine Race, a more subdued but no-less competitive competition was taking place on the sea ice in front of Kotzebue last weekend.

Six mushers and their teams staged three days of fast and furious racing during the 2009 Kotzebue Dog Mushers Association Arctic Circle Championships in Kotzebue. Each day mushers raced for prize money while competing for an overall title and cash based on their cumulative times.

Canadian musher Terry Streeper burned up the trail each day with his 18 dogs, winning each daily event and the overall title with an elapsed time of three hours, 26 minutes and 47 seconds. On his tail each of those days was Bill Kornmuller from Willow, whose total time was 3:29:53. Local Kotzebue musher Paul Hansen rounded out the top three overall with a combined time of 3:43:16. Hansen placed fifth the first day, but was able to pick up the pace in subsequent races to take third on days two and three.

Rounding out the field were John Gallahron, Luke Sampson and Cyrus Harris, all of Kotzebue.

2009 Arctic Circle Championship Results

Overall results (three-day elapsed times): 1. Terry Streeper, 3:26:47, $6,400; 2. Bill Kornmuller, 3:29:53, $5,200; 3. Paul Hansen, 3:43:16, $4,160; 4. John Gallahron, 3:47:07, $3,120; 5. Luke Sampson, 3:47:38, $2,080; 6. Cyrus Harris, 3:54:51, $1,040.

Baker scores Kobuk 440 win

While a Canadian musher came to town to steal the show at Kotzebue's sprint races last weekend, it was a familiar face who crossed the line first in the Kobuk 440 Sunday morning.

At 7:54 a.m. John Baker came across the finish line in Kotzebue with 11 dogs to win the race that travels from Kotzebue through Noorvik, Kiana, Ambler and Shugnak to Kobuk. The race returns to Kotzebue via Shugnak, Ambler, Selawik and Noorvik again. Baker's total time in the race was 63 hours, 14 minutes and 40 seconds.

Almost exactly one hour behind

Baker in elapsed time was Kotzebue's Heath Coro who finished with a total time of 64:14:05. Coro crossed the line with eight dogs.

Third place went to Pete Kaiser, a Bethel musher, who finished with seven dogs in 67:46:41.

Kotzebue musher Ed Iten rounded out the top four, finishing just before 2 p.m. Sunday with a total time of 69:10:18. He finished with 8 dogs.

Other racers finishing included Kotzebue mushers Robert Nelson and Rainer Lorenz, Dempsey Woods from Nome, Jerry Riley from Nenana, Gerald Sousa from Talkeetna, Mike Williams Jr. from Akiak, and Middy Johnson from Unalakleet.

Murphy sports a golden trigger finger at championships

By Keith Conger

In a ski biathlon race, hitting a 4 1/2-inch target at 50 meters using a .22-caliber rifle, with a heart hammering from skiing at a race pace, has been likened to threading a needle while riding on the back of a snowmachine.

This correlation rang true April 3 for virtually all of the participants during the second event of the 22nd annual Western Interior Ski/Biathlon State Championships held at Fairbanks' Birch Hill Ski Area. While the other 40 competitors were averaging slightly better than four out of 10 targets hit, Nome's straight-aiming eighth grader Miranda Murphy shot clean. Hitting 10 of 10 targets vaulted Murphy up in the rankings in the most hotly contested age division at the meet.

After the biathlon results were posted, Murphy, who has yet to miss a target in two years competing at the state level, not only took the podium for the first time ever, but also headed to the top step reserved for gold medalists. Murphy, who has worked hard to get her skiing ability to match that of her shooting, backed up her biathlon victory by posting the fifth fastest split on the 3.5-kilometer team relay course in the junior high girls division.

Nome sixth grader Rosa Schmidt skied the anchor leg of the relay behind Murphy, turning in the fastest junior high girl's split. The pair was not only rewarded with the silver medal for the event, but their efforts helped maintain second place in the overall team trophy standings. By taking the bronze medal in both the 5-kilometer ski race and the biathlon, the diminutive, but fiercely determined Schmidt distinguished herself as one of only two junior high girl triple medalists. The pair from Nome was helped out in the team competition by seventh grader Ariana Horner, who posted fifth and sixth place finishes in the ski race and biathlon, respectively, and by seventh grade ski rookie Hanna Tozier, who cracked the top 10 in her first state-level ski race.

The Nome girls came up 17 seconds short in their quest for relay victory, as they could not quite track down the formidable pair of seventh grade Unalakleet skiers, Katie Daniels and Season Haugen. The duo posted the second and third fastest relay splits, respectively, to capture relay gold. White Mountain eighth grader Precious Lincoln teamed up with seventh grader Rayna Buck-Nassuk to take the third place team trophy.

Haugen also found herself on the top podium spot after the 5-kilometer ski race April 2, as she edged her rival Lincoln by a mere one second. That single tick of the clock would prove doubly important as it became the difference Haugen would eventually need to wrestle the Skimeister Trophy (earned by the outstanding skier in each age category for each multi-race ski event) from Schmidt.

High school results

Emerson Conger, a sophomore on the Nome Ski and Biathlon Team, would run his consecutive victory total in individual races at state-level meets to six. Conger followed a victory in the 10-kilometer ski race, one that he won by nearly four minutes, with the best shooting performance of the high school boys in the biathlon. In the biathlon, the high school racers had to shoot without the aid of a rifle-rest.

By posting the fastest relay split of the day on the 3.5-kilometer course, and nearly breaking the eight-minute mark at 8:02, Conger opened up nearly a one minute lead for his team. A strong anchor leg from freshman teammate Brendan Wehde, who took a silver in the ski race on day one, helped the duo win team relay gold.

Conger's meet results netted him his third Skimeister trophy in as many years. Tanana sophomore Cy Conrad was the runner up for Skimeister with a bronze medal in the ski race and a silver in the biathlon. Ian Witter, a rookie skier from Nenana, made an impressive showing with a pair of fourth-place finishes in the individual events.

Galena freshman Jenna Buchanan used a victory in the five-kilometer high school girl's race, along with the only high school girl's sub 10-minute time in the relays, to extend her Skimeister trophy string to two. She teamed up with fellow Galena skier Kimberly Greenway to take first place in the team relays.

Sophomore Sierra Corsetti from Unalakleet captured her first high school gold medal in biathlon with a narrow eight-second victory over senior Ruby Campbell of Tanana. Freshman Caitlyn Tozier, another ski rookie from Nome, finished with a pair of fifth-place finishes in the individual events.

Junior high boys results

Shyler Johnson, an eighth grader

from Unalakleet, used the fastest relay split in the junior high boys division to lead his eighth-grade teammates, Chris Lockwood and Ben Currier (who was the only other athlete beside Murphy to hit all their targets), to a gold medal in the event, as well as overall team gold. Eighth grader Asa Bergamaschi of White Mountain continued the domination in individual events that he started the week before at regionals with gold medals in the five-kilometer ski race and biathlon. Bergamaschi also earned his first Western Interior Skimeister award.

Nome's Tim Schmidt, an eighth grader, completed the meet with fifth- and seventh-place finishes in the ski race and biathlon, respectively. An up-and-coming pair from Nenana, Robert Austin and Sean Witter, took team silver, while Thomas Amaktolik and Kevin Lone of Golovin took the third-place team trophy.

The team from Nome was awarded the Sportsmanship Trophy as they stayed out at the finish line in each race enthusiastically cheering every racer as they crossed.

Arctic Winter Games

The 2009 Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships was a qualifier for spots on Team Alaska's biathlon teams for the 2010 Arctic Winter Games that are to be held in Grand Prairie, Alberta, Canada, March 6-13, 2010. By winning their high school age group races, Conger and Corsetti earned spots on the ski biathlon team. Both athletes competed in the 2008 Arctic Winter Games in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, Canada. There, Conger raced in the ski biathlon and Corsetti competed in skiing. Conrad earned a spot on Team Alaska's snowshoe biathlon team.

Basketball clinic delivers more than skills to youth

For the second year in a row, Nome Eskimo Community delivered a basketball camp to area students during the Iditarod spring break.

This year, NEC sponsored the Triple Threat Iditarod Basketball Clinic. In 2008 NEC held the Mini-Mukluk Youth Basketball Tournament.

Nome Eskimo Community has offered Challenge Life basketball camps to Nome and the surrounding region for the last five years. Challenge Life Triple Threat basketball clinics are free of charge for the youth.

Those who joined the clinic were greeted by familiar faces, Al Sokaitis and Mike Hajdukovich, founders of The Challenge Life Youth Foundation. Both returning coaches are not only dedicated to the sport of basketball, but strongly emphasize the ongoing health of Nome's youth through diet and sport education. The Challenge Life foundation is responsive to each community it visits.

"The goal is to teach young people the value of helping others and sharing their skills. Included in this unit is an examination of the cultural heritage of the participants. Mentoring, cultural events and community involvement are used to teach the unit," Hajdukovich said.

The Triple Threat clinic ran March 15-18 at the Nome Elementary School gymnasium. Sokaitis was able to connect with students after the Nome-Beltz Junior High School tournament and taught skills to at least 80 participants. The Triple Threat Iditarod basketball clinic registered at least 55 students ages 8 to 18.

"The Challenge Life program is about turning life's challenges into opportunities and not an excuse for failure," Hajdukovich said. "It is about building a physical and mental foundation that will stand up to life's unpredictability. It is about enjoying the beauty of life and giving back to the community where you live. The Challenge Life program is about winning the biggest game of all, the game of life."

NEC representatives believe the clinic plays a vital role for Nome's children at this time of year. "It is important for Nome Eskimo Community to offer positive programs to youth during the Iditarod break," said Marsha Sloan, NEC Tribal Services Director. "So many of the events during Iditarod are for adults, it's a priority for us to focus on our children and youth."

Hajdukovich and Sokaitis will return in August to host NEC's fifth Annual Triple Threat Basketball Camp.

HOROSCOPES

April 9 - 15, 2009

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 19

Your cup runneth over with gratitude this week, Capricorn. Make sure you return the favor one day. A secret is finally revealed at work, and you benefit big time.

ARIES
March 21–April 19

Ask and you shall receive, Aries. Everyone needs a little help now and then. A concept is scrapped at work. Don't let it get to you. It really is for the best.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

Voila, Cancer. Your to-do list for an event is nearly complete. Just one more thing to get, and you know exactly where to get it. Phone calls result in a flurry of activity over the weekend.

LIBRA
September 23–October 22

Push, push, push, Libra. Give a project at home everything you've got, and you will succeed. A brush with tragedy recharges a friend. Learn from their mistakes.

AQUARIUS
January 20–February 18

You're definitely on to something, Aquarius. Hop to it, flesh out your idea and present it to your supervisor. A long-lost relative returns bearing gifts.

TAURUS
April 20–May 20

Riveting conversations with friends make you aware of how good you have it and inspire you to give more of yourself. Start with that lonely neighbor, Taurus.

LEO
July 23–August 22

Racy remarks send chills through work. Do what you can to get everyone's minds off the matter, Leo. Humor is required. A financial need is met.

SCORPIO
October 23–November 21

You're just looking for trouble, Scorpio. Take a step back and leave the situation to someone else to fix. A breakthrough at work leads to a speedy finish.

PISCES
February 19–March 20

Gimme, gimme, gimme, Pisces. That's all you hear at home this week, and it's time to put a stop to the madness. Volunteer work could turn things around.

GEMINI
May 21–June 21

Whew, Gemini! You're down to the wire at work but finish in time. A home improvement project turns out to be more difficult than you thought. Help is at hand if you ask for it.

VIRGO
August 23–September 22

Just be yourself, and your supervisor will come to appreciate you in time, Virgo. Rash decisions at home get you into hot water. Work to resolve the situation quickly.

SAGITTARIUS
November 22–December 21

Your financial worries cease this week, Sagittarius, as a new source of income develops. The parade of invitations does not stop. Pick and choose carefully.

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor David Elmore
Nome Community United Methodist Church
for the Nome Ministerial Association

Reference: Mark 11: 1-11

As I read this passage, I am reminded of the Krewe of Zulu. Traditional Mardi Gras krewes are all about pretending to be royalty, at least for a day. There is the king and the queen and the rest of their court. Many krewes are very elitist; some of the older krewes are so exclusive that you have to inherit your membership. When the city passed an ordinance requiring that parading krewes be integrated, a couple chose not to parade.

A group of African-American laborers saw a musical number entitled "There Never Was and Never Will Be a King Like Me" in 1909. This group made their first appearance as the Zulus that year. This parade parodied other Mardi Gras parades that were just a little too serious. Rather than a regal king in a gold crown with a jeweled scepter, the Zulu King originally paraded wearing a crown made from a lard can, and a scepter of banana stalks. The members all wore black face in order to mock the white's perception of African-Americans as portrayed in minstrel shows.

Now, Jesus' entry into Jerusalem on a donkey parodying the procession of Caesar just as the Zulu parade parodies other Mardi Gras krewes. Jesus knew going in to Jerusalem that he was going to die, but he participates in this piece of satire by triumphantly riding into Jerusalem on a donkey. But more than just Jesus' procession, there is the display of love by adoring followers of Christ. The people welcome him, laying down their coats and leafy branches for Jesus to pass over. They obviously had been waiting for his arrival. And this is an act of love and adoration much like on Mardi Gras morning when hundreds of thousands line the route of Zulu on Jackson Avenue, St. Charles Avenue, and Canal Street to see the Zulu king pass by. This very act of riding triumphantly into Jerusalem amidst this atmosphere would have been viewed as treasonous. The Pharisees really needed no other reason to take Jesus to Pilate.

We all know what Jesus is heading toward. He's heading toward the crucifixion. One day he is loved by many adoring disciples, but in just a few days, he'll be crucified. How does the crowd go from such great love for Jesus to being willing to crucify him in such a short a time? We see a contrast of the love of God, and the love of humanity. As soon as the people, much like Jesus disciples, realized that Jesus wasn't the messiah they were hoping for, they ceased to love him as they had when he entered Jerusalem. We don't love like God does.

Thus Palm Sunday reminds us not only of our shortcomings, but also of God's perfect love - the love that, as we are transformed by God, we should begin exhibiting in our lives. What a contrast: our human condition apart from God, and God's love for us in spite of that.

PITCHING THE PLAN—Gunner Gregory, 16, from Emmonak, meets with Special Assistant to the Governor Joe Balash in Juneau in mid March to lobby for budgeting $50 million toward renewable energy.

Alaska teens talk environment

Two teens from western Alaska joined a group of their peers from all over the state to converge in Juneau in March, delving into the world of environmental politics and speaking out on the issues about which they are passionate.

Alaska Youth for Environmental Action a program of the non-profit National Wildlife Federation, held its ninth annual Civics and Conservation Summit March 15-19. Joining in the summit were Stephanie Thompson, a student at Mt. Edgecumbe High School in Sitka who is from Koztebue, and Gunner Gregory from Emmonak.

Each year the summit provides training in state government structure and function—with an emphasis on the legislative branch—by focusing on current legislation dealing with environmental issues. Eighteen teens from 10 communities across Alaska met with Special Assistant to the Governor Joe Balash and all of their senators and representatives. They also attended a House floor session and testified at a bill hearing. They wrapped up the week with a celebratory community dinner where they honored legislators with their annual Environmental Action Awards.

Gregory is a leader in the AYEIA Statewide Campaign to support Renewable Energy in Alaska and is currently gathering signatures in Emmonak to support the Legislature putting $50 million in the state budget for renewable energy.

Thompson served as a peer leader during the training. She is also the AYEIA campaign leader for the renewable energy campaign. She presented a speech about renewable energy during the community dinner which several state senators and representatives attended.

SPACE FOR UAF-AFES NOME HOUSING EXTENSION

The University of Alaska currently leases a four-bedroom house with a washer/dryer and garage for housing space in Nome, Alaska. This lease with Jason C. Smith, is due to expire on June 30, 2009. He has expressed a willingness to renegotiate a lease extension for a one (1) year period with one (1) additional one-year renewal option. The University feels that the facility offers unique advantages for the operation of its research programs, thus best meeting the needs of the Nome community. If owners of other facilities or interested parties, who can offer comparable or more suitable space, request us to issue a request for proposals in order for us to evaluate their space and its cost, compared to the current housing location, we will do so. If we do not receive such a request in writing, by April 27, 2009, at University of Alaska Fairbanks, Real Estate Management, Attn: Nicole Nordstrand, PO Box 757380, Fairbanks, Alaska 99775 [907-474-6757], we will enter into direct negotiations with and execute a space lease with Jason C. Smith.

Trooper Beat

On January 8, Anchorage Postal Inspectors were provided information from an anonymous tip that reported 3 parcels were going to be mailed to Stebbins containing 34 bottles of Vodka. The parcels were seized and given to the WAANT office for further investigation. Stebbins is a local option village that has a ban on the sale and importation of alcohol. Investigation determined the parcels contained 34 bottles of Vodka as reported. Further investigation determined the shipper was Heather Jack, 18, of Stebbins. Charges have been referred to the District Attorney's Office. An arrest warrant has been requested.

On March 21, AST received a report of a burglary at a residence in Wales. Information is being withheld due to the ongoing investigation.

On March 23, at about 1:40 p.m., a female juvenile reported being assaulted. A suspect has been identified and the investigation is ongoing.

On March 25, at about 9:24 a.m., Nome AST served Pauline Hoelscher, 23, of Nome, a criminal summons from Bethel District Court regarding a charge of Alcohol Transported by Common Carrier.

On March 27, VPSO Lucas Stotts in Shaktolik received a report of stolen fuel oil from a fuel tank at a residence. Investigation is continuing.

On March 28, at 1:30 a.m., AST received a report of a domestic disturbance in Saint Michael. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Robert Otten, 28, of Saint Michael, for Assault IV. Otten was remanded to the AMCC.

On March 29, at about 6:52 p.m., Nome AST received a complaint of a 5-year old juvenile female sexually abused by a juvenile male in the Nome AST patrol area. The investigation is on going.

On March 29, Nome AST received a report that the Stebbins Native Store had been burglarized. Investigation resulted in Jared Henry, 18, and Jeremy Pete, 22, both of Stebbins being identified as the individuals that committed the crime. On April 1, Henry and Pete were arrested and transported to Nome for arraignment on charges of Burglary in the Second Degree, Theft in the Second Degree and Criminal Mischief in the Fifth Degree.

On March 30, Nome Alaska Bureau of Alcohol and Drug Enforcement contacted Brianna J. Campbell, 21, of Gambell, at a local air carrier in Nome. Incident to contact, 1-750ml bottle of alcohol was seized from her luggage. Charges will be forwarded to Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals.

On March 30, Nome ABADE contacted Jenna C. Toolie, 19, of Savoonga, at a local air carrier in Nome. Incident to contact, 1-1 liter bottle of alcohol was seized from her luggage. Charges will be forwarded to OSPA.

On March 30, at about 4:55 a.m., Stebbins Police Department reported the Stebbins Native Store was burglarized. Suspects have been identified and the investigation is on going.

On March 31, at approximately 8:30 a.m., Mahlon Ferreira Jr., 36, of Kotzebue, was remanded to AMCC on an outstanding arrest warrant for Assault IV DV.

On March 31, Unalakleet AST received a complaint of an alleged attempted sexual assault occurring in a village in the Norton Sound. The suspect has been identified and investigation is continuing.

On April 1, at approximately 5:45 p.m., a female from Elim brought her two young children to the Elim Clinic with suspicions of sexual abuse. AST will continue to investigate.

On April 2, Unalakleet AST received a report of vandalism occurring in Stebbins last weekend. A suspect has been identified and AST and the VPOs are continuing to investigate.

PUBLIC NOTICE STATE OF ALASKA DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENTAL CONSERVATION

The Department of Environmental Conservation received an application for renewal of an oil discharge prevention and contingency plan, under Alaska Statute 46.04.03 and in accordance with 18 AAC 75.420. The details are as follows:

Applicant: Crowley Petroleum Services, Inc. P.O. Box 2287
Seattle, WA 98111-2287

Proposed Activity: Crowley Petroleum Services, Inc. is currently approved to conduct oil transfer operations using Articulating Integrated Tug-Barge units (AITB) to transport 167,057 barrels of petroleum product to and from onshore bulk storage terminals in Cook Inlet, Alaska. This plan renewal proposes to add the North Slope, North West Arctic, Western Alaska, Bristol Bay, Aleutians, Kodiak, Prince William Sound and Southeast regions of operation to the Crowley Petroleum Services, Inc. Oil Discharge Prevention and Contingency Plan (Plan) (ADEC Number 09-CP- 5106). An oil discharge prevention and contingency plan is required that will commit adequate resources to plan for containment, control, and cleanup of non-crude oil equal to the discharge response planning standard volumes for these tank barges in all areas of operation.

Number 09-CP-5106).

Any person wishing to submit a request for additional information (RFI) or provide comments regarding the amendment application may do so in writing to the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation, 555 Cordova Street Anchorage AK 99501, by facsimile to 907-269-7566, or e-mail at samanthasmith@alaska.state.us. claims of the Three Lucky Swedes, Charles D. Lane and many others. This episode in Nome's history was known as "The Spoilers."

Locally, debate turned to the incorporation of Nome as a First Class City. After gaining Noyes' blessing, a vote for incorporation was held on November 6, 1900. A total of 384 voted against incorporation while 316 were in favor. The measure was defeated by cheechakos as well as the saloon and gambling element known as the Sporting Class, who simply feared taxes. Frustrated, the Nome Chamber of Commerce attempted to govern Nome. They tried to raise money for the operation of government by subscription, which was basically donations from wealthy businessmen interested in securing law enforcement and fire protection for their own interests. Once again, locals had no respect for the Chamber of Commerce as it was a loosely organized group of entrepreneurs not elected by the citizens of Nome. The Chamber lacked the discipline and structure of a city government.

There was still not enough money to pay for city bills. In January 1901, when the Chamber president Albert Fink proposed a $15 head tax against chamber members, the organization fell apart. The debate to incorporate heated up once again. When Federal Judge Stevens threatened that gambling would die if incorporation failed, the town voted in favor of incorporation 695 to 108 on April 9, 1901. The First Class City of Nome, Alaska was born!

will continue to do so. Mark Begich did nothing wrong in getting elected. There is no legal precedent for his removal from office. Further, I can not believe that the taxpayers of Alaska want to waste the huge amounts of money it would take to hold a special election. The Republican Party, Randy Reudrich and Sarah Palin need to clean their own houses before casting a cloud of doubt on someone who is obviously doing his job, and doing it very well! If former Senator Stevens wants to run for elected office he has now been legally cleared to do just that. I thank Senator Begich for doing the job he was fairly elected to do and hope he will continue doing it for many years to come.

Thank you,
Janet K. Woodfin
Chugiak, Alaska

Fellow Alaskans,

It's time for some of our Republican friends and neighbors to simmer down. Mark Begich was elected because he was the better candidate - he was leading in the polls last summer before Senator Stevens was even indicted. And lets not forget the indictment was handed down in the first place because there was strong evidence that he had done something illegal. Our senator did in fact accept gifts that he never reported and he, with 40 years experience in Washington, certainly knew better. He broke the law and the fact that the Bush administration's lawyers handled the prosecution in a faulty manner does not change that. I think it's admirable that President Obama's A.G. has decided not to pursue the case and that Senator Stevens is able to go into his retirement with some of his pride intact. Forget spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on a special election. We can't afford it and we have a very fine team as it is with Senators Begich and Murkowski representing all of Alaska in Washington, D.C. Our country is in a crisis, perhaps the worst since the Great Depression, so let them work together towards solving these more important issues and forget the sideshows.

Sincerely,
Patti Boily
Homer

Wehde named superintendent

By Tyler Rhodes

Nome Public Schools' next superintendent will need no orientation to the district.

A familiar face in the district office, current assistant superintendent Jon Wehde plans to hit the ground running when he takes over the seat Rick Luthi will vacate this June.

The Nome Board of Education voted to give Wehde a two-year contract at a special meeting held last Thursday evening. "Nome is a wonderful place to do business as an educator. Our school staff is into kids. That's enough to make anyone apply for the opportunity that the board extended to me last night," Wehde said Friday.

Wehde is perhaps being a bit modest.

He was the only one to answer the call put out by the school board in late March when it asked for applicants within the district to apply for the job. There could be a few reasons for the sole application. The job of

Fate of Rock Creek Mine still up in the air

By Tyler Rhodes

Despite the release of first quarter financial data and a project update last Wednesday, the crystal ball still appears murky as to the future of the suspended Rock Creek Mine and NovaGold Resources' operations in Nome.

In an April 15 press release, the Canadian mining firm reports that it will "maximize the value of Rock Creek in 2009." Whether that means NovaGold will sell the project, form a partnership to restart and operate it with another mining company or undertake the operation again on its own is still to be determined. "The field is open," said NovaGold President and Chief Executive Officer Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse in an interview April 16.

Before any of those options are considered, however, Van Nieuwenhuyse said his company has other priorities in Nome. "Our main objective and focus is the water behind the dam and getting the water treatment plant up and running," he said.

That dam at the Rock Creek site is currently holding back 55 million gallons of water, Van Nieuwenhuyse said. Originally designed to hold mostly dry tailings, the dam was not intended to impound water. A series of delays thwarting production at the mine and abundant snowfall in the winter of 2007-2008 led to the tailings storage facility taking on more water than anticipated.

Van Nieuwenhuyse and state regulators were optimistic in mid-February that the water treatment plan would be up and running and pumping water from behind the dam into injection wells. Approximately two months later, the plant is still awaiting final approval. "I think we're making good progress with that with the state. These things always take a little longer than expected," Van Nieuwenhuyse said.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said the water treatment plant is scheduled to be operating in the first week of May.

When operating, the plant is to treat the water in the pond to what is dubbed the aquatic-life standard, a standard more stringent than that for drinking water. The treatment is necessary since the water has come into contact with the tailings—or waste rock—and chemicals that were used in the mill process to help extract gold from the rock. Those chemicals include cyanide. Despite the short run the mill experienced before the operation shut down in November, the chemicals are still present in the water.

Once the plant is approved and up and running, Van Nieuwenhuyse said it should be able to process approximately 300 gallons per minute or about 400,000 gallons per day. Once treated the water will be pumped into the ground by injection wells.

Even though the dam was not intended to hold primarily water, Jack DiMarchi of the state Department of Natural Resource's Large Mine Permitting Team does not see the build-up of 55 million gallons as cause for alarm. "They have enough storage capacity there for many months. There's not any sort of impending disaster," he said.

Nevertheless, DiMarchi said DNR is pushing to ease the pressure behind the dam. "We do want them to get that water treatment plant going to get the water down," he said.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said the water level

Woman jailed on sex and booze charges with minors

By Tyler Rhodes

What started as a call to police reporting students with alcohol and tobacco at Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High School has resulted in sexual abuse charges levied against a 41-year-old woman.

The Nome Police Department arrested Sylvia R. Ivanoff late in the evening Saturday. She has been charged with first-degree sexual abuse of a minor, furnishing alcohol to a minor and contributing to the delinquency of a minor. The abuse charge is a felony while the furnishing and delinquency charges are misdemeanors.

According to the police department, the ar-

Lawmakers reject Palin’s choice for AG

On April 16, the Alaska Legislature busted an unprecedented move and rejected Governor Sarah Palin’s controversial nominee for attorney general. The lawmakers voted 23 to 35 against the confirmation of Wayne Anthony Ross. “I believed I knew what Alaskans wanted when I selected an individual who is a strong backer of Second Amendment rights, a staunch supporter of the state Constitution and a defender of life,” Palin said in response. Native groups including the Alaska Federation of Natives had opposed Ross for his stance on subsistence. Reportedly, the straw that broke the camel’s back was Ross’ advice to Palin regarding the appointment of a vacant Senate seat.

Palin appoints Egan to Juneau senate seat

In the last day of the legislative session, a power struggle between

Gov. Palin and the lawmakers came to an end when Palin gave in and appointed Democrat Dennis Egan to fill the Juneau Senate seat left open by Kim Elton. Egan is a former mayor of the City and Borough of Juneau and son of the state’s first governor, William Egan. Elton resigned to take a position in the Obama administration.

Legislature adjourns passing 61 bills, 33 resolutions

By Sunday, April 19, the state had a lean budget totaling $3.5 billion, accepted federal funds bound to Alaska via the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act and issued resolutions pleading with federal entities to not restrict resource development in ANWR or the Arctic Ocean.

“At a time when oil prices were down we were really fortunate to have the federal stimulus money to come in and fill that gap,” Rep. Reggie Joule, D-Kotzebue, said. “Even though it’s been a tough year for getting things into the budgets, we were still able to get heating assistance and PCE funded.”

Palin lamented the lack of funding for resource development, as the Legislature did not include $3 million for western Alaska access, among other projects. Currently, a consultant company researches the feasibility of a road leading to Nome.

The Legislature approved $7.1 million to continue work on the in-state gas pipeline and $100 million in FY 2009 grant awards from the Renewable Energy Fund. The grants will allow utilities across the state to advance more than 80 generation projects utilizing wind, solar, hydroelectric, hydrokinetic and bio fuels. Another $25 million in grants are included in the FY 2010 capital budget appropriation bill. In an amendment to FY 09, lawmakers appropriated $9 million from the general fund to the Department of Health and Social Services, division of public assistance, for low-income home energy assistance and the Alaska heating assistance program.

The Department of Education and Early Development budget includes $1.1 billion for Alaska’s 53 school districts and 129,000 students. The budget has $23 million for a $100 increase in the base student allocation from $5,480 to $5,580. The Legislature also approved $600,000 to assist school districts needing improvement particularly in the areas of reading and math. The funding allows the Department of Education and Early Development to hire a director of rural education to work with communities, organizations and schools to improve the academic success of rural and Alaska Native students.

In addition, the lawmakers passed bills of importance for rural Alaska. Rep. Reggie Joule sponsored a bill that is geared to expand the Village Public Safety Officer program so that municipalities or boroughs could receive grants to administer Department of Public Safety grants to run the program. Currently only regional non-profit organizations are running the VPSO program.

The state Senate passed a bill that creates an electronic health network doing away with inefficient paperwork transfers. A secure electronic Health Information Exchange system will allow patients to have their own personal health record and to authorize their health care providers to exchange electronic medical records in a timely, secure manner.

Curiouser and Curiouser

It’s like the Mad Hatter’s tea party. Lewis Carroll would have a hey-day with the Red Queen a.k.a. Gov.Sarah Palin shouting, “Off with their heads!” But only if they are a Democrat and hoping to represent Juneau in the Legislature. Palin’s foisting off a Republican-turned-Democrat before the ink can dry on their party affiliation papers is petty and unbecoming the chief executive officer of our state. Oh, wait. On the last day of the legislative session a Juneau Representative was approved just in time to watch the gavel slam down.

With only a few days remaining in the legislative session our governor took off to the Lower-48 on a speaking engagement to further her own political agenda. She plays that old “Yes, I can see Russia” line and talks like a tough Alaskan gun totin’ Annie Oakley. The petty partisan pissin’ contests have got to stop. Palin should realize that she should act in behalf of all Alaskans, not just the folks who share her personal ultra-conservative beliefs.

We need to have the Legislature get down to the business of passing serious legislation such as the declaration of the malamute as the state dog, issuing Iditarod license plates and setting aside Feb. 2 as Marmot Day. Will there be an official state marmot? Where will he reside? What happens if he sees his shadow? Will we have to move the capital to accommodate the marmot? Can we use stimulus funds for this? What the heck is a marmot? Will that critter in Punxutawney, Penn. feel overshadowed? —N.L.M.—

Resolutions, both joint and concurrent, included urging the federal government not to adopt any policy, rule, or administrative action or enact legislation that would restrict energy exploration, development and production in federal and state waters around Alaska, the outer continental shelf within 200 miles of shore and urging the President of the United States and the United States Congress to encourage and promote continued exploration, development, and production of domestic oil and gas resources. Legislators pleaded for opening ANWR to oil and gas exploration and protested the designation of the Arctic Ocean as a World Heritage Site. The designation would protect the ocean from resource development and maritime shipping traffic.

An odd bill passed both House and Senate that gives Iditarod finishers the privilege to apply for a special Iditarod race finisher license plate. One must be an Iditarod Trail Sled Dog race finisher to join the ranks of Alaska National Guard personnel, veterans or recipients of the Purple Heart for the honor to sport a specially designed license plate.

Also, lawmakers passed a bill that will designate September 7 as the Daniel Inouye Day. Inouye, a long-time Congress member from Hawaii, has been a friend of Ted Stevens and sided with Alaska on many issues on the Senate floor on Capitol Hill, which earned him the dedication.

EPA finds greenhouse gases pose a threat to public health

On Friday, April 17, the Environmental Protection Agency went public with the statement that greenhouse gases contribute to air pollution that may endanger public health or welfare. After a thorough scientific review ordered in 2007 by the U.S. Supreme Court, the EPA issued a proposed finding which identified six greenhouse gases that pose a potential threat. “This finding confirms that greenhouse gas pollution is a serious problem now and for future generations,” said EPA administrator Lisa Jackson. EPA’s proposed endangerment finding is based on rigorous, peer-reviewed scientific analysis of six gases — carbon dioxide, methane, nitrous oxide, hydrofluorocarbons, perfluorocarbons and sulfur hexafluoride — that have been the subject of intensive analysis by scientists around the world. The report concludes that concentrations of these gases are at unprecedented levels as a result of human emissions, and these high levels are very likely the cause of the increase in average temperatures and other changes in the earth’s climate.

Climate changes can manifest as increased droughts, heavier downpours and flooding, more frequent and intense heat waves and wildfires, greater sea level rise, more intense storms and harm to water resources, agriculture, wildlife and ecosystems.

Federal court rules strikes down federal oil leases

A three-judge panel struck down a federal leasing program to open oil and gas reserves for drilling in the Beaufort, Bering and Chukchi seas. The Mineral Management Service failed to adequately study the environmental impact, ruled the judges.

The ruling came three days after Interior Secretary Ken Salazar held a hearing in Anchorage regarding resource development in the Outer Continental Shelf that drew emotional testimony from over 500 Alaskans on both sides of the issue. Native hunters voiced concern for oil spills that may devastate marine mammal populations and North Slope workers argued the need for jobs and energy independence. The Alaska Delegation as well as Governor Sarah Palin are staunch supporters of offshore drilling.

Kotzebue asks for declaration of disaster

The Northwest Arctic Borough has issued a disaster declaration at the request of the City of Kotzebue. Kotzebue was pummeled by a winter with low temperatures and unusually high snowfall, which exhausted the city’s snow removal budget and taxed their snow removal equipment, according to city officials. The city and borough are concerned about potential flooding during spring breakup. The borough had sent a letter to the governor’s Disaster Policy Cabinet with the request to declare a disaster. DPC however found that found that the NWAB’s request does not identify immediate life safety issues and that more information is needed to qualify for a disaster.

• Wehde

better prepared than Wehde within the district's ranks to take on the task.

"We were just totally impressed with the interview process. He has the best interest of the whole community at heart," said Nome Board of Education President Gloria Karmun in an interview Friday. "We have full faith and trust in him and believe he will do his best for the district as a whole."

The vote to offer the contract to Wehde—which includes a salary of $95,000 and a provision for lodging, among other items—came after a 2 1/2 hour closed session Thursday evening. The vote to award the contract to Wehde was unanimous.

Karmun also said the board is supportive of choosing leaders from within its ranks. Besides showing confidence in the abilities of district staff, the practice also saves the district money. "We believe in promoting within when feasible if they meet the criteria," Karmun said.

Originally from a farming community in rural South Dakota, Wehde has been involved in education for more than a decade. He has worked in the Nome school district for six years, the last four in the district office. Wehde came to the district to serve as the principal of Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High School.

Prior to coming to Nome, Wehde was the principal in Kalskag for two years. For four years before that, he taught in the Kuspuk School District.

His wife, Lisa Wehde, teaches second grade at Nome Elementary School. Their children, freshman Brendan, eighth-grader Cecilia and seventh-grader Dawn all attend Nome schools.

As he made his way through the halls of the district office Friday, Wehde was greeted with several congratulatory hellos. Inside his office, the walls tell the tale of both the preparation he has had for the job and the challenges he will face once he is at the helm. Among the items lining those walls are charts and graphs measuring the performance of students and local schools over the past several years.

Wehde is intimately aware of where Nome schools stand in relation to the standards set by the federal government. He also knows how far test scores need to rise to meet the federal mandates. "[The] No Child Left Behind [Act] developed means and methods where we can understand our students' needs as clearly as a doctor reading an X-ray," Wehde said.

One of the clear challenges of Wehde's tenure will be leading the charge to improve how those X-rays read.

A more pressing issue facing Wehde and the district, however, may be simply the number of students in their care. As was the case at the start of the last school year, Wehde is again anticipating a drop in the number of students enrolled in the district. As of Friday the student population stood at 640. More than 730 were expected to start school in the beginning of the current school year. "Six hundred and forty is significantly less than we budgeted for when we entered last year," Wehde said.

The problem with a dropping student population is tied to the subsequent hit to the budget. "As enrollment drops, there's a direct relationship to funding," Wehde said. Already looking at a tighter budget for next year, even fewer students will complicate matters.

"There are indicators that [the enrollment decline] has not bottomed out," Wehde said. Wehde said parents are informally telling school secretaries that they will have moved by the time the next school year starts. Wehde said the anticipated migration out from Nome appears to be fueled by the high cost of living. "It's almost all economic in nature," he said.

Other areas of focus will be pre-kindergarten education and alternative education for older students, he said.

Wehde is not solely facing gloom and doom, however, even when it comes to the financial picture. With federal economic stimulus money soon to come down the pipeline, Wehde sees opportunities mixed in with the challenges ahead. "We're going to want to see where those type of funds, along with standard resources, can fit with opportunities for our students. What vistas and horizons do we have before us in distance education?" he said.

Wehde also sees opportunity in the future for renewable energy technology to help bring down the cost of running the schools. "I'm very optimistic that we're on the mature side of renewable energy; it's no longer a pipe dream," he said. Wehde said whether it be solar-thermal or wind energy, he believes the schools are well positioned to incorporate renewable energy technology into its systems. He said he is anxious to see whether the governor would include any school-specific funding for renewable energy.

Wehde is also optimistic in regard to the staff, students and school board that all make up the district. "I've had the chance to watch our school board conduct business, and we have a wonderful school district," he said.

• Rock Creek

has been stable at the 55 million gallon level for several months now.

As breakup starts to leave its muddy mark on Nome, Van Nieuwenhuyse said NovaGold's current focus in Nome is also trained on managing the runoff from the melting snow. After last winter's hefty snowpack caught the mine off guard, NovaGold developed a storm-water runoff plan. That plan will be followed this year to control runoff. Van Nieuwenhuyse does not anticipate the amount of water produced from this year's snowpack to be as abundant as last year. "Nome has certainly received several good dumps of snow recently, but our records indicate that the water content is significantly lower than last year," he said.

Operations won't resume this year

While there are a few options on the table for the suspended mine, resuming production this year is not among them. "We will thoroughly assess the exploration upside at Rock Creek in the coming months and will formulate a re-start plan," Van Nieuwenhuyse said.

Of the three options—sell, partner or try again on its own—Van Nieuwenhuyse said no one currently holds sway over others. As he has said for some time, NovaGold would consider selling the project if the right proposal came along. "If [a sale] will maximize shareholder value, that's an option we will consider," he said.

Asked if there were any offers currently before NovaGold, Van Nieuwenhuyse said he could not comment on purchase offers. "The business terms will be made available as they become defined," he said.

A partnership—an arrangement to which NovaGold is accustomed in other projects—is also a potential reality. "I have had two separate conversations today [regarding partnerships]. There are certainly active discussions going on," he said April 16. NovaGold is working on the Galore Creek prospect in British Columbia jointly with Teck Cominco and the Donlin Creek prospect near the Kuskokwim River with mining heavyweight Barrick Gold.

Entertaining other options does not mean NovaGold has thrown in the towel in regard to working the project on its own again. "We obviously know the project well," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. "We know what the problems are we had last time around, so to speak. Obviously it's possible that we would go ahead and put it back into production ourselves."

The gold market has also helped fuel the uncertainty over the mine's future. "It really has been a very soft market. I think given all the calamity going on in the financial markets worldwide, people would have expected gold to perform better," Van Nieuwenhuyse said. "It's not a bad gold price, but it certainly hasn't moved anywhere in a year. It's certainly off of the high."

Van Nieuwenhuyse said NovaGold does not have a solid cost projection for getting the mine up and running again. "The restart plan is really for that—to get an idea of the cost, the budget and a plan to restart," he said.

Among the potential changes at Rock Creek, NovaGold mentioned in a press release the possibility of wind-generated energy to supplement the power it buys from Nome Joint Utilities. Wind generation would reduce "both the environmental impact and operating costs at the Rock Creek mine," according to the release.

Ups and downs

NovaGold's update on its projects was released along with the company's financial data for the first quarter.

NovaGold posted a net loss of $28.5 million ($.20 per share) for the three-month period that ended Feb. 28. The company posted net earnings of $24.2 million for the same period last year.

According to a press release, the $52.7 million dollar difference was due to a number of factors. Some gains realized in 2008 were one-time events, such as the sale of an investment. The suspension of the Rock Creek Mine and work at the suspended Galore Creek Mine accounted for an $8.6 million charge that was not experienced in 2008. The press release also cited unfavorable foreign exchange rates between the Canadian and U.S. dollars that accounted for a loss of $5.5 million more than the previous year.

NovaGold reported revenues of $400,000 for the three months, compared to $1.7 million the previous year. The company, which currently generates income from land and gravel sales along with gold royalties, attributed the reduced revenue to lower interest rates on its cash reserves.

If the Rock Creek Mine were up and running as envisioned, Van Nieuwenhuyse said that revenue stream would be much more robust. "Basically, Rock Creek in production, at today's gold prices—I'll use $900 an ounce, even though that seems optimistic—would produce a cash flow $25 million to $30 million dollars per year," he said.

Nevertheless, Van Nieuwenhuyse feels the company is standing on good financial footing for the year to come. He said NovaGold has $70 million in the bank with planned expenditures of $30 million. Despite that assurance for the near-term, NovaGold's financial outlook report acknowledges that the development of its major projects, such as Donlin Creek, will require additional external financing to go forward.

It wasn't all losses NovaGold had to report in its first-quarter update. NovaGold also announced a bump in its resource estimate at Rock Creek by 24 percent. A result of drilling surveys conducted last year, the jump in resource estimate does not include drilling done on the nearby Saddle deposit. Van Nieuwenhuyse said an update on that drilling will be soon forthcoming.

Van Nieuwenhuyse said NovaGold will follow up this year with a more modest drilling program of approximately 20 holes.

rest stems from an April 6 call to the school complex regarding students possessing alcohol and tobacco. After a two-week investigation, the police allege Ivanoff purchased and provided alcohol for several juveniles ages 12 to 13. The police also claim she engaged in sexual acts with juveniles under the age of 13. "The thing out at the school was just the tip of the iceberg," said Nome Police Chief Dallas Massie.

Massie said the department's investigation, which is ongoing, revealed one alleged significant incident as well as "some activity that's been going on over time."

Massie said the two-week lag between the incident at the school and the arrest was due to the severity of the charges. "We had to move as swiftly as we could and still try and be as thorough as we could and get valid information," he said. "With the potential of other people being victimized, we couldn't let this thing hang out there and not deal with it."

Massie said at this time no charges have been filed against the juveniles who were allegedly found with alcohol and tobacco. "The main focus, of course, are the more serious issues—the furnishing [of alcohol] and the sexual abuse issues," Massie said. "We're looking at the [juvenile] folks involved as victims in this case."

Ivanoff was arraigned at the Nome Court-house before Judge Ben Esch on Sunday. A preliminary hearing in the matter is scheduled for April 29 at 1:30 p.m.

JROTC drives for Nome Food Bank

Nome JROTC cadets have been taking boxes of nonperishable foods to the Nome Food Bank. And with the support of the community and Emergency Services, cadets are again helping supply food to hungry Nomeites. Cadets have gathered non-perishable food items on Saturdays in April between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. at the ambulance garage.

The food drive has been an annual JROTC service project since the program's earliest years. The need to supply food for the Food Bank has remained.

JROTC's effort is not yet finished. Drop boxes are placed at Alaska Commercial, Hanson's and Nome Trading Company.

Cadets will empty the boxes and bring the items to the Food Bank. Nomeites will have one more opportunity to thin their pantry. Cadets will be available to unload cars on May 2 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the front of the Ambulance Hall. With the community's help, JROTC hopes to stock the selves at the Nome Food Bank.

Planning Commission seek fees for permitting

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome's planning panel has asked the Nome Common Council to charge a fee for asking planners' permission to use land for purposes other than its zoning designation under the City's new land use law.

As it stands under zoning law, Nome's land has conforming uses, permitted uses and conditional uses. Permitted uses under the zone regulations require an owner to get a permit from City Hall—

that's it. Conditional uses have stiffer regulations with the owner required to come before the Nome Planning Commission for a hearing. If that public hearing, after adjacent property owners are notified and paperwork generated, comes at a regularly scheduled meeting, the fee is $200. If an off schedule meeting has to be called to handle the specific land issue, that will cost more—$300.

The zone law OKs nonconforming land uses already underway when zoning came in to continue under a "grandfather" clause. Copies of zone regulations reside at City Hall and Kegoyah Kozga Library. Commissioner Charlie Weiss urged that zone maps become available to the public and that a Web site updated with information.

The Council has the power to approve the charges, modify them or turn thumbs down.

In other business, the NPC passed a resolution approving the work of consultant Peter Robb in a project leading to replatting the Nome Sandspit, the tongue of land that separates the Small Boat Harbor and turning basin from the main harbor in the area of the new Snake River exit and has its beginning south of C, D and E streets.

In easy terms, the move extends C, D, and E streets toward the water, south past River Street, and allows for private and public use areas in the harbor area.

Nome harbor improvements, including filling in the old Snake River mouth, cut through the Sandspit and eliminated the western portion of Gold Avenue, making it useless. The Council adopted an ordinance vacating Gold Avenue effective March 23.

Commission members are Jerald Brown, Jeff Darling, Irene Anderson, Jimmy Adams, Greg Smith and Weiss.

Three earn Girl Scouts' highest honor

AnnieKate Olson, Lauren Steiger and Richelle Horner receive Gold Award

By Tyler Rhodes

It's the end of the road for Richelle Horner, AnnieKate Olson and Lauren Steiger—and with them, so goes Nome Girl Scout Troop 3.

It's a happy ending, however, one which only a handful of girls who start the scouting journey achieve. The three young women who make up the troop have attained the highest honor possible in Girl Scouting, the Gold Award.

To put the honor in perspective, only 5,500 girls nationwide—5.4 percent of all eligible Girl Scouts—earned the Gold Award last year. It has been several years since a Gold Award has been given in Nome.

The award was a dozen years in the making for Olson and Steiger, while Horner has been in scouting for the past eight years. In those years, the trio has spent time at camp, dedicated countless hours to interest badges and service projects—and sold some cookies and served a few pancakes along the way. They made their way through the ranks of Daisy, Brownie, Junior, Cadet and Senior, and earned the Bronze and Silver awards, each requiring its own extensive project.

To earn the Gold Award, each girl had to plan a major project that would benefit the community and be sustainable. The projects also had to be approved by the Farthest North Girl Scout Council. While the girls helped each other on the final projects, each had to plan and direct the execution of her particular endeavor.

Horner tackled the Girl Scout Camp at Dexter for her project. "It wasn't that bad, it was just a lot of painting," she said. In addition to the gallons of paint, Horner oversaw the construction of shelving and the replacement of screens and mosquito netting.

Olson's project will help ensure that local Girl Scout history is preserved. She gathered old photos and a timeline of the development of scouting in Nome since its start in 1947. Among the items she gathered were photos of community members in their younger days as Girl Scouts. "I found some pictures of when Janice Dougherty was in Girl Scouts," Olson said.

Olson also chronicled the history of the Girl Scout camp, from its start at what was the old Dexter Roadhouse, then into donated Army Quonset huts and on to its current form.

Steiger targeted the Nome United Methodist Church's Thrift Shop for her project. "We built shelves and organized the clothes and the books," she said. "We went in to look at it, and it was really, really messy and people couldn't find what they wanted. So we decided to help."

The girls have been shepherded through the process by Troop Leader Sharon Keeney. Keeney has been able to see the benefit Girl Scouts has bestowed on the girls and the community. "It's a really good organization for girls and families to be involved in," she said.

The girls will receive their awards May 7 during the Farthest North Girl Scout Council's annual Women of Distinction Awards ceremony in Fairbanks. The award ceremony—a fundraiser for the Girl Scouts—honors four women each year who have made contributions to the Fairbanks community.

The ceremony is a fitting venue for the Nome girls to receive their honors. In addition to the camaraderie and fun experienced through scouting, there is also quite a bit of work necessary to make it to the end of the line and earn the Gold Award. The desire to give back is partly what drove the three girls to see it through. "It helps out your community," Horner said.

"It's an honorable reward that people can acknowledge you for," Steiger added.

School Board approves heavy agenda action items

By Janet Ahmasuk

Although only two NPS Board members were physically present for the Tuesday, April 14, meeting a heavy agenda of action items awaited board approval. Action items approved by the board included;

- The final reading of BP 5113 (b) – student absence-excused/non-excused

- Approval of Memorandum of Agreement for Nome High School Building D and E roof replacement

- Approval for Honeywell proposal for Nome-Beltz fire alarm

- Approval of the hire of Shari Biscotti as elementary principal

- Approval of FY/10 School Photography Contract with Hugh Thomas

- Approval of non-tenured Certified Hire(s): 1. Teacher – NES - Jeff Collins 2. Technology – District Wide – Justin Heinrich

- Approval of Exempt Contracts: 1. Business Manager – Jenny Martens 2. Personnel Officer – Cynthia Gray 3. Social worker – Amber Raber

- Superintendent Resignation – passed roll call with one comment by Gloria Karmun, “with regret.”

The hiring of the new NES Principal was a committee driven effort.

NPS board members physically present at the meeting were President Karmun and Betsy Brennan. Barb Nickels was available by phone. Board members Albert McComas and Kirsten Timbers were excused. Student Representative Cori Eide was not present, but her report was distributed.

Superintendent Rick Luthi, Board member McComas and Business Manager Jenny Martens were not at the board meeting because they were at the Nome-Beltz/Charter School complex in Certified Staff Negotiations. At or around 6:30 p.m. the board went into executive session to discuss a student expulsion.

Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Director Jeff Selvey announced his resignation and that this was his last board meeting for NPS. He has been in Nome seven years.

Since the start of the school year, NACTEC had 13 sessions with a total of 239 students that have successfully completed a NACTEC session.

The NACTEC House “punch list” is 98 percent complete. One remaining project on the checklist is the pouring of the cement for the basketball court, which will have to wait for spring break up. The NACTEC office, classroom and shops renovations will be complete by the end of May. The office renovation is 95 percent complete, the classroom is 100 percent complete, and the three shops are 80 percent complete.

Selvey said, “It has been a pleasure working with NPS in developing and implementing the NACTEC program. It has been a great adventure working with the staff, students and all stakeholders.” He believes as a team NACTEC has given NPS students a great opportunity to prepare for life after high school.

Selvey resigns as the NACTEC director effective June 30. He and his wife take great memories and experiences with them as they prepare for the next chapter in their lives. This is his 33rd year in public education, with 30 of these years in Alaska. Selvey has accepted a position with the Department of Labor in Anchorage starting on July 1, 2009. The title of the new position is “Education Specialist II.” The main focus of this new position is ensuring implementation for the vocational education strategies embodied in the Department of Labor and Workforce Development Gasline Training Strategic plan.

Students of the Month for March: Russell Smith is Junior High Student of the Month. Kellen Baker is Senior High Student of the Month.

High School Principal Janeen Sullivan reported:

During Standard Base Assessment/High School Graduation Qualifying Exam testing April 7-9 (science SBA for grades 8 and 10) Nome School Board, Nome Volunteer Fire Department, Nome Rotary, Dan Sullivan, Fred Lammer and John Boyles cooked breakfast for the testers. Maile Cay worked diligently to make all the arrangements for this major event. Nome Eskimo Community donated snacks for the 7-9th grade testers.

The snow days are finally made up! Nome-Beltz had an in-service day Saturday, Feb. 28, and parent-teacher conference make-up days on March 28 and April 4 to replace the three days school was cancelled this winter.

NBHS parent-teacher conference turnout was the second highest in recent years, with lots of room for continued improvement. Overall, 36 percent of the students had parents attend conferences on their behalf. An Alaska Native Science and Engineering Program coordinator was in Nome April 7-9 to work with a group of nine juniors and seniors. Students in the program are also encouraged to participate in online tutoring assistance for these classes that is available through ANSEP. Upon graduation students who have completed ANSEP requirements are eligible for scholarships and other post-secondary assistance.

Outreach clubs have held food drives to support and assist the local food bank. The High School Compassion in Action Club baked cookies to welcome the visiting teams during the regional basketball tournament, sponsored the poster contest for the tournament, and have been heard singing the school song in conga-line formation in the hallways.

Since the last board meeting, the Nome boys took second at the state tournament.

The cheerleaders raised money to go to state as well. They took second place at the state tournament and also stayed to cheer for the boys team in all three games.

Individual awards at the state tournament:

- Mason Evans – Player of the Game

- Jesse Blandford – Player of the Game, All Tournament Team, 1st Team All State

- Jeremy Head – Player of the Game, All Tournament Team, 2nd Team All State

- David Stickel – Good Sport Award

- Michael Hawkins – Good Sport Award

- Lauren Steiger – Cheerleader of the Game, All Tournament Team

- Emmylou Vial – Cheerleader of the Game

- Elizabeth Herzner – Cheerleader of the Game, All Tournament Team.

- Rebecca Callahan – Region I Cheer Coach of the Year

- Patrick Callahan – Alaska 3A Boys Basketball Coach of the Year

Breakfast Snack Program

Denise Berengo, Executive Director of Nome Eskimo Community, notified NES that NEC will be supporting the Breakfast Snack Program with $18,000. This guarantees that this program will continue for the 2009/10 school year. All students at Nome Elementary School are eligible to participate free of charge. Thank you Nome Eskimo Community for your generous support of NES students!

Parent-Teacher Conferences

NES had Parent-Teacher Conferences on March 28 and April 4. NES had 80 percent attendance rate by parents. Some teachers reported a rate of 95-100 percent.

Testing

All third through sixth graders took Alaska Standards based Assessment on April 7-9. This test determines whether Alaskan schools make Adequate Yearly Progress. NES Measures of Academic Progress more commonly referred to as MAP testing started April 20 and goes through May 15.

Current Enrollment

There are 336 students enrolled at NES.

There will be an Extension presentation at the next work session.

One of the sure signs of spring is when Shishmaref holds its annual Spring Carnival complete with dog racing and basketball action. Winning the three-day 27.5-mile event was Teller's Joe Garnie, followed by Shishmaref locals Daniel Olanna, Jeffrey Nayokpuk, Percy Nayokpuk, Alfred Ningeulook and Bessy Sinook. Mushers report that the sun was strong enough to make the trail a bit soft and to give dog drivers' faces a nice tan.

Jamie K. Kakoona

November 13, 1983 ~ April 8, 2009

Jamie Victor Kakshuk Kakoona was born to Linda M. Tocktoo and Benjamin K. Kakoona on November 13, 1983, in his Papa Arthur E. Tocktoo’s house down the beach. Our beloved son, brother, father, uncle, and nephew went to be with his father Benjamin Kakoona and older brother Reuben O. Tocktoo on April 8, 2009. Jamie loved doing all types of subsistence activities, especially riding and hunting with his cousins Jon Tocktoo, Andrew Tocktoo, Ward Olanna, Clarence (DickDick) O., Reuben L. Adam, Aaron Tocktoo, Thomas O., Eddie Barr, Sam Rock, M.O., Norton Rock, Robert Rock Jr., and his brother Archie N. Kakoona.

Jamie loved to help his Papa Arthur Tocktoo whenever he asked for help.

Jamie is survived by his mother

Linda M. Tocktoo and stepfather David Divers, brother Archie and sister Doreen; his partner Ada M. Olanna and children Sherri Lynn, Ivan Reuben, and Davey Stephen, his Papa Arthur E. Tocktoo, numerous aunts, uncles and cousins within the region.

Jamie was preceded in death by his father Benjamin K. Kakoona, brother Reuben O. Tocktoo, his grandmothers Polly Anna Tocktoo and Helen Kakoona, grandfather Kenneth Kakoona, uncles Paul and Roy Kakoona and aunt Mary Vann Kakoona.

Jamie will be dearly missed by all who knew him.

Ruth Keenock Outwater

September 27, 1916 - March 23, 2009

Kotzebue resident and lifelong Alaskan Ruth Keenock (Savok) Outwater, 93, died peacefully March 23 in Kotzebue.

The Kotzebue memorial was held at the Friends Church in Kotzebue. A potluck followed. A funeral was held at Central Lutheran church in Anchorage. A potluck followed.

Ruth was born September 27, 1916, in Shungnak, to John and Lily Savok. She was the third oldest of the children. Her older siblings were James Savok and Ida Watt. Ruth’s younger siblings were Anna Thomas, Fred Savok, Lydia Glasshoff, Rachel Dimmick, Joshua Savok and Irene Armstrong.

She and Walter Outwater were married in Candle in September 1938. She lived with her husband in Deering and Nome, where Walter worked on the gold dredge in summertime. In 1948, they decided to settle in Deering, where they would later become store managers. In the mid 1950s Ruth was very active and influential as the pastor’s wife of the church.

“Ruth lived a rich and fulfilling life,” her family wrote. She made all of the clothing for the family, making sure all her children and her husband had new mukluks and parkas every Christmas. Ruth loved to cook, worked on all the animals her husband harvested and put away food for all seasons to make sure her family was always well fed. Church was her life. Ruth’s entire life was spent serving God. No matter where she was, she never missed having Sunday school, even in the tent when the family was camping. Ruth, beloved wife of the late Walter Outwater and a loving mother, grandmother and great-great grandmother, will be missed by all who knew her. May the Lord bless her, and may she rest in peace.

Ruth is survived by her two sisters, Rachel Dimmick of Anchorage and Irene Armstrong of Buckland; seven children, Theresa Pierce, Loretta Cox and husband Skip, Richard Outwater and wife Sandy, Clara Varieur and husband Thom, Peggy Turner and husband Tim, Martha Outwater and companion Rahn Parker and Walter Outwater Jr., and many grandchildren. She was preceded in death by three children, Mamie Savok, Walter Johnson Outwater and Evelyn MacNeven; and her beloved husband of 67 years, Walter Emuk Outwater.

Distinguished Provider Award

Healthy Alaska Natives Foundation Oversight Committee sponsored the Second Annual Raven's Ball on March 27, 2009. Healthy Alaska Natives Foundation Oversight Committee holds the Raven's Ball annually to benefit the foundation, raising funds to sustain our early stages of development and see our target initiatives comes to fruition: Cancer care improvement for Alaska Natives, sustainability of our world-class wellness and prevention programs, strengthening elder health care, developing healthy village environments and investing in those with a dream of higher education through the HANF Scholarship Fund.

Each year someone is selected and honored statewide with the Distinguished Provider Award and the Community Spirit Award.

This year's award for the Distinguished Provider Award was awarded to Norton Sound Health Corporation's own Dr. David Head. Dr. Head has served as Clinical Doctor for the Norton Sound Health Corporation in Nome for over 20 years.

Jerome Trigg, Jr. Koodook

Oct. 2, 1936 - April 9, 2009

Some people take center stage, other people are only too happy to help support them in their efforts; Jerome was the supporter. He was always there, but there to allow others to shine; he seemed happier in that role.

Jerome was born Oct. 2, 1936 in Nome to Nellie and Jerome Trigg, Sr. When born, he joined brothers Bill and Darryl. Later he was followed by sister Barbara, brother Jerry, sister Shirley and sister Darlene.

As a young person he lived in Nome, Anchorage, Seward and Palmer due to his father working in the construction field. He also attended school in those respective places.

In 1960, with permission from his parents, he joined the U.S. Marines and served in San Diego and Kodiak. After a stint in the Marines, Jerome joined the U.S. Army in 1963 and served in Germany. Upon completing his military service he was part of the National Guard from 1965 to 1967.

After a time with the military he met and married Martha Noyakuk, together they had four children: Pamela, Valerie, Jerome Trigg III and Sara. Through Martha, he was introduced to the Baha'i Faith and officially his Baha'i life began in April 1970; where Jerome and Martha became the first Eskimo Baha'i couple in the world.

While Jerome worked with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Wien Airlines, Martha and Jerome served on Baha'i local Spiritual Assemblies throughout Alaska. They were appreciated for the wonderful contributions they made to the communities, and people were sorry when they and their children moved on.

Jerome would make sure his family and friends had everything they needed, and he supported his community. He was a long time member of the Arctic Native Brotherhood and volunteered in the Lonnie O'Connor Iditarod Basketball Classic as an ANB representative. Jerome also volunteered in various community activities; such as ANB Picnic, City Basketball Leagues, and the assorted Native corporations in the region.

Jerome loved his cultural life, which was applied to his life. He went hunting and fishing at every opportunity he could, and spent much time at his camp. He enjoyed carving, making ulus and diamond willow canes and he loved to share them with family and friends.

During Jerome's passing, he was surrounded by family and friends with song and prayers.

Some people took center stage. Jerome helped assure their success.

Jerome was preceded in death by his wife Martha Trigg; daughter Pamela White; mother and father, Jerome and Nellie Trigg; brothers Billy and Darryl, and sister Barbara. He is survived by his daughters Valerie and Sara; son Jerome III; brother Gerald Trigg, sisters Shirley Nicklalaskey and Darlene Trigg; granddaughters Sandra Christian, Yolanda Apted, Ashley and Rebecca Christian; great-granddaughters Sheranda Oliver, Pamela West and Emily Cesani. He is also survived by many nieces and nephews who dearly loved Jerome as well and will miss him.

HOROSCOPES

 CAPRICORN December 22–January 19 Rest assured, Capricorn, that you can count on that dear friend. They said they would help, and they will. Romance reaches a fever pitch at home.	 ARIES March 21–April 19 You receive a chilly reception from a friend. Don't let it get to you, Aries. Something else is going on. The debate continues at home. Join in!	 CANCER June 22–July 22 A home improvement project is no walk in the park, Cancer. Don't bite off more than you can chew. Envy rears its ugly head at an event, but you somehow manage to squelch it.	 LIBRA September 23–October 22 Trouble stalks you at every turn, Libra, but you always find a way to escape it. Sunnier times are on the horizon. Sweet treats top off the gaiety at work.
 AQUARIUS January 20–February 18 Wouldn't you know it? Just when you're ready to enjoy a little one-on-one time with that special someone, pals drop by. Welcome them, Aquarius; they have important news to share with you.	 TAURUS April 20–May 20 You've been wrestling with an issue for what seems like forever. However, this week, it will all come to a satisfying end. Get out the party horns and celebrate, Taurus.	 LEO July 23–August 22 You've been way too busy lately. Finish what's on your plate and take a few days off. Whisk that special someone off on a romantic rendezvous, Leo.	 SCORPIO October 23–November 21 Doesn't matter to you, does it? At least that's the attitude you'll hold this week toward life at home, Scorpio. You're staying out of everyone's business and taking some time to yourself.
 PISCES February 19–March 20 Tact eludes you at a special event, Pisces, and what you do next astounds everyone. Laugh it off. Everyone acts out of sorts from time to time.	 GEMINI May 21–June 21 A hobby loses its allure. Not to worry, Gemini. The magic will return when you need it most. The momentum picks up at work, and assignments compound.	 VIRGO August 23–September 22 You get what you deserve. Lucky for you, Virgo, it's exactly what you hoped for. A trip down memory lane initiates plans for a small reunion. Enjoy!	 SAGITTARIUS November 22–December 21 All right, Sagittarius. Green thoughts make for a flurry of activity at home. Keep up the good work. Every little bit you do to save the earth counts.

SPACE FOR UAF-AFES NOME HOUSING EXTENSION

The University of Alaska currently leases a four-bedroom house with a washer/dryer and garage for housing space in Nome, Alaska. This lease with Jason C. Smith, is due to expire on June 30, 2009. He has expressed a willingness to renegotiate a lease extension for a one (1) year period with one (1) additional one-year renewal option. The University feels that the facility offers unique advantages for the operation of its research programs, thus best meeting the needs of the Nome community. If owners of other facilities or interested parties, who can offer comparable or more suitable space, request us to issue a request for proposals in order for us to evaluate their space and its cost, compared to the current housing location, we will do so. If we do not receive such a request in writing, by April 27, 2009, at University of Alaska Fairbanks, Real Estate Management, Attn: Nicole Nordstrand, PO Box 757380, Fairbanks, Alaska 99775 [907-474-6757], we will enter into direct negotiations with and execute a space lease with Jason C. Smith.

Award Winners

Village representatives from across Alaska met recently for the 2009 ANICA, Inc. Annual Delegates Meeting. Each year, the 100 percent Native cooperative selects one from its membership to receive the Store Manager of the Year award.

This year the award was presented to Jodie Steve, manager of the Stebbins Native Store in Stebbins. Steve has earned this title due to her outstanding performance managing the Stebbins Native Store and is to be congratulated for a job well done!

The following managers were also recognized for exceptional performance:

Tommy Anagaiak, Tununak
Myron Kingeekuk, Savoonga
Davis Lincoln, White Mountain

The annual award presented for extraordinary performance by a store manager was a high point of this year's Annual Delegate meeting.

Nome on the watch as swine flu spreads

By Tyler Rhodes

The two words have been inescapable for nearly a week now: Swine flu.

Although no cases of the fast-spreading flu were reported in Alaska as of Tuesday, local health officials were taking precautions and starting an awareness campaign in Nome. “The main thing is we’re essentially watching the situation,” said Chris Kilby, director of Public Health Nursing at Norton Sound Health Corp. “We are involved in frequent telephone and teleconference contact with the state.”

In a joint effort, the health corporation and the Local Emergency Planning Committee have put together a proactive plan for the public to help try to prevent the spread of the flu if it were to show up in Nome. The recommendations boil down to common-sense practices to prevent the spread of most illnesses:

- Wash your hands or use hand sanitizer
- Cover coughs and sneezes
- Stay at home if you are sick

Beyond following those recommendations and arming themselves with knowledge, there was little else Nomeites could do last week to guard themselves against the outbreak were it to reach Nome and the region. “We don’t want to raise any unnecessary panic, but people need to pay attention,” said Tom Vaden,

Indigenous people unite to confront climate change

By Diana Haecker

Yaqui Indian Andrea Carmen wrapped up last week’s Indigenous Peoples’ Summit on Global Climate Change saying that the meeting was “incredibly inspiring as well as heartbreaking to hear everybody’s stories and experiences and struggles we’re going through in the different regions facing the impacts of climate change.”

Anchorage’s Dena’ina Center set the stage for Native delegates from all four corners of the earth trying to come to grips with a changing climate and its impacts on humans, land, water, animals and plants.

An explosion of color greeted the spectator during plenary sessions and keynote speeches—most discussions were behind closed doors—as participants were decked out in the tribal regalia of their region. While delegates from the sunnier parts of the world had a hard time adjusting to Anchorage’s balmy 45°F weather, arctic representatives sweated under their kuspiks and sealskin vests.

However, it was not a fashion show that inspired the occasion. More than 400 indigenous people answered the call to come to Anchorage to draw up a declaration (see related story) to be delivered to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, slated for December 2009 in Copenhagen. It was to make a stand and to give a unifying voice to indigenous peoples who have not been heard in the mainstream debate on the impacts on climate change.

This, argued UN General Assembly president Miguel d’Escoto, has to change as “we must integrate indigenous views, policies and deeply held values into the global response to the challenges of global warming.”

The Inuit Circumpolar Council was one of the leading partners to bring the summit about, and chairperson Patricia Cochran, representing the arctic, hosted the event together with a steering committee of six members representing North America, the Pacific, Africa, the Caribbean, Asia and Latin America. After five days of meetings and a night of a world dance celebration, the summit participants concluded with a sigh of relief to

Gillnetters take aim at sport fishers, pollock fleet

Probable ban on subsistence gillnet fishing for king salmon riles Unalakleet

By Laurie McNicholas

Unalakleet residents reacted to news of a potential ban on subsistence gillnet fishing for Chinook (king) salmon in their area’s marine waters and rivers by criticizing state regulations that allow catch-and-release sport fishing for kings and a federal plan they say allows the Bering Sea pollock fishery to take too many kings as bycatch.

Jim Menard, Norton Sound and Kotzebue area manager for the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, presented 2009 salmon fisheries forecasts for the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts during a meeting of the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. last week in Unalakleet. He said the ADF&G sport fish division will conduct a telemetry study of Chinook salmon in the Unalakleet River this summer.

Menard’s announcement that no commercial fishery for kings is anticipated this year was not surprising. Unalakleet fishers have faced poor king salmon returns throughout this decade, and last year they endured the poorest king run on record. The ADF&G has allowed commercial king salmon fishing in only one year since 2001 in the Unalakleet and Shaktoolik subdistricts.

King salmon subsistence and sport fisheries in the subdistricts were restricted in 2003, 2004, 2006 and 2007. Both fisheries closed early in 2008. Last week when Menard said he is afraid closures of subsistence gillnet fishing will occur in the area’s marine waters and rivers this year, his audience boiled with resentment.

Several local residents and NSEDC board members told Menard that catch-and-release sport fishing often kills king salmon. They reported finding dead kings, including females filled with eggs, in their nets while fishing for chum salmon. They reported seeing dead kings on the bottoms of streams.

“There has been sport fishing since the 1970s, commercial fishing since the 1960s and subsistence fishing for thousands of years,” stated Steve Ivanoff of Unalakleet, a commercial fisherman. “My Limited Entry Permit is based on history, so sport fishing should be the first out the door based on user permits. My kids have never fished Chinook commercially; they don’t get to see what it’s like.

“I just recently became a sport fisherman for Chinook,” Ivanoff said dryly. He probably meant that he subsistence fishes for king salmon with hook and line. Menard said an ADF&G survey of Unalakleet subsistence fishers shows that 40 to 50 percent of them take their catch with hook and line.

Ivanoff then aimed barbs at a different target—the NSEDC board of directors. As one of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Program, NSEDC receives annual allocations of a portion of the total allowable catch of Bering Sea pollock on behalf of its 15 member communities, which include Unalakleet.

The company annually receives

Dear Editor,
Subject: Mercury in Alaska's Northern Pike

The Kuskokwim and the Yukon Rivers are known for their naturally occurring mercury in the water and in the fish. I would like to focus on the Kuskokwim River that traverses a cinnabar (mercury) mineral belt. I would consider this river as "mercury stressed". Just 52 miles upstream from Crooked Creek, there was a mercury mine at Red Devil that closed in 1971. Today, waters still flow over the tailing and the sediments near the area are extremely high in mercury. The Red Devil Mine was considered to become an EPA Superfund Site and slated for clean-up starting in June, but in a recent conversation with the Department of Natural Resources I learned this will probably not happen.

In the Yukon River the northern pike exceeded the FDA Action Level of 1.0 mg/kg for mercury in their flesh. The potent neurotoxin, methyl mercury (MeHg) in an Alaska Fish and Game study was at 1.56 mg/kg in the flesh and 1.2 mg/kg in the liver.

The study went on to state that based on EPA guidelines, children should only consume two meals of pike per year.

To date no fish advisory has been issued for pike or any other fish in Alaska. Children are especially sensitive to this neurotoxin.

In the lower Kuskokwim River dried pike with seal oil is a popular, beloved traditional subsistence food. The drying process further concentrates the MeHg.

Recommendations were made by the state on how many meals a week people should consume for many different species of fish including salmon, lingcod, rockfish and halibut, to name a few. Generally the longer, larger and older fish increased the amount of mercury that was bioaccumulated and recommended and decreased the number of meals to be eaten each week. Pike was NOT on this long list of fish species.

I believe, based on the area's geology, mercury concentration in the larger pike in the Kuskokwim River should be greater than in the Yukon River. I believe a fish advisory needs to be issued.

Recently tundra swans have been showing up dead after consuming roots and tubers from a marsh in northern Idaho. These swans migrate to Alaska. The very high lead content in this marsh was directly linked to metal mining for the past 100 years. Also, southern Idaho has been contaminated with airborne mercury from the gold mines in northcentral Nevada.

I feel there is a good chance that Alaska's fish and game will be contaminated by large mines just as they were in Idaho. I am very concerned about Donlin Creek Gold Mine Project because it will add mercury to an already "mercury stressed" watershed.

Sincerely,
Dr. Derrick Leedy (Veterinarian)

Revelations

According to an old song, "They say that breaking up is hard to do", and right now break-up in Nome is no picnic. We've had more snow this year than in recent memory and although it is not quite diluvian, it has Biblical significance, as in Revelations. As the snow melts, many forgotten treasures are revealed. Did we forget where we parked that old 4-wheeler? Do we see some old, forlorn flowerpots beginning to surface?

While we await springtime in the arctic, we need to find something to relieve the ennui of patchy fog, closed airports, sleet, drizzle, mud, slush, soggy socks, power outages, wet dogs, and leaky roofs. What we need are a few unique breakup activities. Those folks in Nenana have a good thing going with the Ice Classic. Here we are with two rivers at the edge of our town. Why not have our own ice classic with the ice going out on the Snake and the Nome rivers? Surely we could keep the musk ox and the drunks from stumbling over the tripods. Heck, we could even bet on the structural integrity of the tailings dam at Rock Creek Mine. We could have a contest to see whose street has the biggest puddle, or we could go for quantity instead of quality. Of course there are potholes a.k.a. chuckholes. Some of them are Boone and Crocket candidates. Why not have a pothole-jumping contest? There could be many categories from the mere pedestrian to the more challenging motorized vehicle group.

What should be the incentive to win? How could we contrive a river tripod? Would the prize for the pot hole jumpers be a new set of shock absorbers? Would free swimming lessons at the Nome-Beltz pool make us feel better about those big puddles? Maybe we could go Hawaiian with ukulele music and pineapples on Front Street. We can be creative or we can sit back and snooze till it's time for the Midnight Sun Festival. The sea gulls have arrived. Can summer be far behind?

Ulu News

By Senator Donald Olson

The first session of the 26th Alaska State Legislature ended on Sunday, April 19. Much of this session was spent deliberating what to do about the budget and the federal economic stimulus plan and funding, given the current economic situation. If that weren't enough, a significant amount of time was consumed over the vacant Juneau Senate seat appointments, as well as by the appointment of Wayne Anthony Ross for Attorney General. Governor Palin finally ended the stalemate over the vacant Senate seat by appointing former Juneau Mayor Dennis Egan, the son of Alaska's first Governor. The nine Senate Democrats, myself included, unanimously and enthusiastically confirmed Egan to the seat. In response to Ross, however, many Native and non-Native Alaskans voiced strong opposition to his appointment as Attorney General. In the end, Mr. Ross proved to be too controversial, and by a 35-23 vote he was not confirmed; no Democrats voted to confirm him.

On Wednesday, I sent out an e-mail to all the communities and school districts in my district with an attachment showing what each of them received from the capital budget that was recently passed by the Legislature and sent on to the Governor for signature. Governor Palin has 20 days (excluding Sundays) from when the appropriation bill is sent to her until she has to sign the bill and veto any line items she so chooses. Folks who did not receive this information and would like to, please send an email to me or my staff and we will make sure that it reaches them.

Unfortunately, this year there were NO discretionary funds included for any legislator. This means that all of the items that I requested on behalf of the communities and organizations in District T were NOT funded. This is the first time in as long as anyone can remember, which is at least 15 years, that this has happened. It affected each district in Alaska. Part of what was funded in the capital budget came from the budgets submitted by the Governor. This included the Village Safe Water program, various road and airport projects, $25 million for Alaska Energy Authority (AEA) projects, in addition to other programs executed by various departments. The good news is that our district had a high proportion of the projects that made it into the capital budget, and so we fared better than most others.

Our work was limited by this year's short, 90-day session, but nonetheless we were successful in passing the following legislation:

Olson Opens CFEC Public Records to ARDORs:

My Senate Bill 3, soon to be signed into law by the

Foster's Report

Stimulus funds, budgets dominate 90-day session
By Rep. Richard Foster

The first session of this Legislature has come to a close. Despite a few issues, this has been a very anticlimactic end.

Legislation that did not pass this session is still in play and will pick up where it left off in its current committee of referral. This is my 21st year representing the district. My focus, as always, is to maintain operating expenditures in the area and to maximize the capital budget dollars in our district. This year our district was second for capital spending, and these dollars do immeasurable good for the communities.

As the rest of the country deals with the recession, I can't help but notice the similarities between the federal economic stimulus package and our capital budget. They are both meant to have a three-fold impact: They provide jobs where they are lacking, introduce money into the local economy, and improve/create infrastructure, which will hopefully create opportunities for private business. Rural Alaska depends on these projects to keep their communities afloat and its infrastructure up to date.

Due to the low price per barrel of oil, this year's capital budget is significantly more modest than it has been in recent years. Due to the budget shortfall, the vast majority of this year's projects will be departmental in nature. For our district that means mostly airport and water/sewer projects. Along with this was the federal stimulus package, which bolstered these same types of projects, added funding for education and provided for competitive grants. The state has set up an information clearinghouse

Struck by cab, 2-year-old dies

By Tyler Rhodes
A 2-year-old boy died in Nome Monday after wandering in front of a cab in which he had just ridden. According to a press release from the Nome Police Department, Christopher George Johnson-Ozenna exited a Checker Cab with his father in front of their residence on McClain Lane just after noon on April

27. While the father was unloading items from the rear of the cab, the toddler wandered in front of the 2008 Ford passenger van. When the father closed the rear doors, the cab pulled forward, striking Johnson-Ozenna. McClain Lane is on Belmont Point near the mouth of the Snake River. The cab driver, who police identified as 31-year-old David D. Evans, and the father drove the child to Norton Sound Regional Hospital where he died as a result of his injuries. Johnson-Ozenna would have turned 2 years old in June. Nome Police Chief Dallas Massie said Tuesday that while the department's investigation continues, it appears no charges will be filed as a result of the incident. "It's a very tragic accident," he said.

Troopers investigate infant death

Alaska State Troopers are investigating the death of a 4-month-old girl in Unalakleet that occurred Sunday. According to a press release, Troopers were advised April 26 that the baby was found unresponsive in her parent's bed at 6:30 a.m. The baby was taken to the Unalakleet Clinic and pronounced dead at 7:30 a.m. The child's body was taken to the state medical examiner in Anchorage for an autopsy. Troopers say that alcohol was a factor and that the investigation is ongoing. Trooper Sgt. Andrew Merrill of the Nome post said Tuesday morning that no further information, including names, were being released at the time.

Legislature allocates millions to challenge polar bear listing, BP lawsuits

The legislature funded two lawsuits brought by the state of Alaska's Department of Law. One litigation relates to the listing of polar bears as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act. The legislature's budget for FY 2010 gave the Department of Law $1.25 million to protect the state's interests related to the ESA, including funding lawsuits and other activities challenging the listing of polar bears as a threatened species and the listing of beluga whales in Cook Inlet as endangered, said a DoL press release. The state seeks to defend the right of the state to develop its natural resources. The second litigation funded by the legislature is aimed to assert substantial claims of the state for damages caused by BP Exploration Alaska's negligent practices on the North Slope. On March 31, the Department of Law filed a civil lawsuit against BPXA, stemming from the 2006 crude oil pipeline spills and production shutdowns at Prudhoe Bay. In the lawsuit, the state seeks penalties for violations of environmental laws and just compensation for state revenues lost as a result of BPXA's negligent corrosion prevention practices. The legislature allocated $3.5 million in FY 2010 funding requested by the department to allow the state to litigate its claims against BPXA.

Alaska Airlines waives ticket change fees to Mexico

In response to recent outbreaks of the swine flu in Mexico, Alaska Airlines allows for ticket changes for passengers surrounding to and from Mexico from April 27 through May 20. Change fees and additional fare collection will be waived if the rescheduled flights are booked in the original class of service to the same city pairs as originally ticketed. Rescheduled travel must commence on or before May 20, 2009. Travelers reconsidering a visit to Mexico can keep their travel date, but can change their destination without being charged a change fee. According to the Centers for Disease Control, the Government of Mexico has reported 18 laboratory confirmed human cases of swine influenza A/H1N1 infection. Investigation is continuing to clarify the spread and severity of the disease in Mexico. CDC and state public and animal health authorities are currently investigating 20 cases of swine flu in humans in California, Texas, Kansas, Ohio and New York City. No swine flu has been linked to Alaska. At this time, only two of the 20 cases in the U.S. have been hospitalized and all have recovered, but deaths are reported to have occurred in Mexico.

Recovery Act funds 88 Fish & Wildlife projects in Alaska, none near Nome

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced on April 27 that Alaska is slated to receive $10.7 million for 88 projects including fish passage and salmon habitat restoration, improvements to visitor centers and energy efficiency projects. According to the Fish and Wildlife Service, the $10.7 million is broken down in the following way: $3.86 million for habitat restoration; $3.27 million for energy efficiency retrofits of service facilities; $2.37 million in deferred maintenance of facilities/ infrastructure; $1.14 million for reconstruction and repair of service buildings; and $650,000 for capital improvements. USFWS units in Anchorage, Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, Bethel, Dillingham, Galena, Kotzebue and McGrath, as well as several national wildlife refuges, are listed to get a piece of the pie.

chair of the LEPC.

Just as when it was feared that a wave of norovirus would reach Nome via the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race a few years ago, a public information effort is underway to urge community members to follow the simple recommendations to reduce the spread of illness. "We will be increasing public awareness in restaurants, bars and local facilities, such as the school, so people are aware to do those things—hand washing, cover their coughs and sneezes," Kilby said. The message is also being spread through public service announcements on local radio stations.

"Just do what you would do when there's a cold going through town," said Louis Murphy, a local health care provider who specializes in infection control. Murphy's comments were representing his own opinion and not that of his employer.

In the case of the norovirus, it appeared the precautions worked. "Nobody got real sick. Everybody did what they were supposed to do," Murphy said.

Nome Emergency Services Administrator Elaine Tate agrees. "Nome did not suffer like other communities did. The aggressive campaign is given credit for preventing a big outbreak here," she said. "We're going to do the same thing with the swine flu."

For those who are experiencing flu symptoms—which Murphy says somewhat mirror those associated with a cold, only much worse, along with an accompanying fever—it is recommended that they see a physician. According to the Centers for Disease Control, the symptoms of swine flu are similar to the symptoms of regular human flu and include fever, cough, sore throat, body aches, headache, chills and fatigue. Some people have reported diarrhea and vomiting associated with swine flu.

Early in the week the government recommended avoiding any unnecessary travel to Mexico, the origin of the outbreak. As of Tuesday afternoon, at least 20 deaths were confirmed and nearly another 150 were suspected due to the swine flu in Mexico.

Those who have been travelling in areas where known infections have occurred and are experiencing symptoms are strongly encouraged to consult a doctor. "If anyone has been in Mexico and has symptoms, they should come by for evaluations," Kilby said.

Tests to determine if a sick person has indeed contacted swine flu will be conducted by the state virology lab in Anchorage. "It is a fairly sophisticated test, so it's not done locally," Kilby said.

As of Tuesday, the closest confirmed swine flu cases to Alaska were two reported in British Columbia. Public health officials in the state have been quoted as saying it's not a matter of if but when the flu will appear in Alaska. Sixty-four cases were confirmed in the United States as of Tuesday with 28 of those coming from one New York City high school. In Mexico, 20 fatal cases had been confirmed. However, as of Tuesday, at least 1,600 infections and 150 deaths were suspected in that country due to the outbreak. The number of people infected as well as the locations at which the flu has been found continued to grow each day early this week. By Tuesday, seven nations—spanning from Canada to New Zealand—had reported cases.

Cases in the United States and elsewhere around the globe as of Tuesday did not appear to be life-threatening. The apparent dichotomy between the severity in the Mexican cases and those elsewhere has puzzled health experts.

Flu shot still advised

Those who received their flu shot this year should not feel immune to swine flu should it arrive in the area. "The flu vaccine is not proven to necessarily protect against swine flu," Kilby said. "However, health officials at the CDC and the Alaska Department of Health and Human Services are both recommending the use of flu shots for anyone who has not received the flu vaccine."

If there are fewer cases of seasonal flu due to more people receiving the flu shot, potential cases of swine flu will stand out, helping epidemiologists track the disease, Kilby said. Flu shots received since October are still considered good, and the current vaccine is good until June 30. Flu shots are available by appointment through the Public Health department at 443-3221.

Kilby said Norton Sound Health Corp. should soon receive a limited supply of anti-viral medication that could be used as needed if cases of swine flu do appear in the region. She said the medication would be reserved for high-risk populations, such as "anyone who appears to have severe illness or anyone with pre-existing conditions who could have more severe response to flu than a healthy person would have."

Emergency Services Administrator Tate said the city's ambulance and fire crews will soon be wearing masks when they respond to calls. For the moment, she said, the masks are more of a training and preparedness measure than a guard against any perceived widespread threat. "It's not that, 'Gee, we think you have germs.' We just want them to get used to wearing the masks, so when it's the real thing, they are already used to wearing the masks," she said.

Tate also said the LEPC will hold a special meeting Thursday at which a flu pandemic presentation will be held as well as a discussion of the public information campaign. The meeting, slated for noon at the fire hall on Bering Street, is open to the public.

What you should know

Symptoms of swine flu

Fever, cough, sore throat, body aches, headache, chills and fatigue. Some people have reported diarrhea and vomiting associated with swine flu. If you have these symptoms or suspect you have the flu, it is recommended you see a physician.

Who to call

Nome Public Health Nursing can be reached at (907) 443-3221. Call the department for general information on swine flu or to schedule a flu shot.

How to avoid the flu and other illnesses

- Wash your hands or use hand sanitizer
- Cover coughs and sneezes
- Stay at home if you are sick

NSEDC chips in $1 million for Unalakleet wind farm

By Laurie McNicholas

Last week the Unalakleet Valley Electric Cooperative bagged a $1 million donation from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. to help fund a wind farm for the community.

NSEDC board members approved the funding allocation April 24 on the third and final day of their quarterly meeting in Unalakleet.

NSEDC's donation will supplement $4 million in state monies that UVEC soon will receive from the Alaska Energy Authority's renewable energy fund. UVEC submitted a proposal to the AEA in the first round of renewable energy fund grants, requesting nearly $8.8 million to construct a wind diesel hybrid project.

The AEA also authorized a first-round grant allocation of $4 million to Nome Joint Utility System for wind farm construction on Newton Peak.

UVEC Manager Ike Towarak said the $4 million in state funds will pay for four wind turbines and a power line, and the $1 million NSEDC provides will help pay for two additional turbines. The wind farm site has not yet been selected.

NSEDC board member Wilfred Katcheak of Stebbins asked Towarak how many gallons of fuel UVEC uses annually and the cost per gallon. Towarak said the utility uses 300,000 gallons at rates ranging from $2.17 to $4.19 per gallon.

Some board members questioned the proposal for NSEDC to help fund a wind farm for Unalakleet. An initial funding request for $1.3 million for two wind turbines was introduced in a motion by Don Stiles, Nome's representative on the NSEDC board. He reasoned that the turbines will benefit the community and reduce electricity costs at NSEDC's salmon processing plant in Unalakleet. Earlier in the meeting, Stiles had asked the board to consider a future donation of $1 million as matching funds for a proposed project to construct a seawall at Unalakleet.

Dan Harrelson, NSEDC's president and board chairman, asked where the company would get $1 million to donate to the UVEC wind farm project. Janis Ivanoff, NSEDC's chief executive officer, said it would come from an escrow account.

Elvina Naranjo of Koyuk asked Towarak whether he had submitted proposals for funding from sources other than NSEDC. He replied that he hasn't had time and was waiting to determine how much project financing would be needed.

Stiles noted that $4 million in state revenues had been approved for the project. Towarak said he expected the state to mail him a grant agreement that afternoon. Naranjo requested a role call vote on the motion, noting that some board members may have questions about it.

"What about other communities that don't have the facilities?" asked Joel James of Gambell.

"High energy costs are a major concern," Harrelson replied. "Unalakleet is lucky to get its act together and go for a grant. Most of our communities don't know jack about power distribution."

Harrelson announced that he and CEO Ivanoff have discussed setting up a fund for $1 million for each of NSEDC's member communities to help them get power projects. As one of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Program, NSEDC represents 15 Bering Strait communities. The CDQ program receives a 10 percent allocation of the annual total allowable catch of Bering Sea pollock, along with allocations of other fish and crab species in the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands area.

Harrelson said it scares him that slick salesmen may sell junk turbines to communities. He advised a cautious approach to renewable energy projects and suggested that staff look into alternatives to determine what works best for each community. Stiles suggested adding the topic to the agenda for the next board meeting. Charles Saccheus of Elim said a geothermal energy project would be appropriate for his area.

"If we give Elim $1 million, that's not enough to cap geothermal and bring it over power lines, but if three villages combined energy funds from NSEDC they might be able to attract enough money from other sources to fund a geothermal project," Harrelson commented. Saccheus noted that the state is offering many millions of dollars in energy project grants and he wonders how to access them.

Harrelson, who resides in White Mountain, said representatives of his village and Golovin have discussed a joint wind project with power lines running between the villages. "AVEC told us the power lines would cost $300,000 to $400,000 per mile," he added.

Towarak said he had seen a proposed power line from Pilgrim Hot Springs to Kotzebue and Noorvik drawn on a map at an energy conference. The Alaska Center for Energy and Power, University of Alaska Fairbanks, has requested $2.4 million for a Pilgrim Hot Springs assessment in the second round of Alaska Renewable Energy Fund proposals. The AEA has recommended the proposal for funding, but it is not among the 30 top-ranked project proposals totaling $25 million included in the capital budget. The UAF energy center and AEA are among sponsors of a major geothermal conference held April 28-30 at Chena Hot Springs resort.

Joe Garnie of Teller said the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative is planning a wind analysis project for Brevig Mission and Teller. The AEA has recommended a second-round funding allocation of $117,610 for the project. If a wind project proves feasible for the area, Garnie said Teller could use its energy funds from NSEDC to help implement it. "Teller people are still using honey buckets and [NSEDC's] funding needs to be more equal," he stated.

"The board feels that some communities get more than others," Saccheus noted.

"I feel the northern villages are left out of the funding our board gives us," added Frank Oxereok of Wales.

Harrelson suggested a friendly amendment to Stiles' motion to reduce the amount of funding for the Unalakleet wind farm from $1.3 million to $1 million, in keeping with NSEDC's plan to allocate $1 million for renewable energy projects in each of its other member communities.

"Sure," replied Stiles. "I certainly understand any community's efforts to reduce their cost of energy." He reminded board members that last year they had approved Naranjo's proposal to provide an electricity subsidy ($500) for each eligible household in the region this winter as a short-term solution to high energy costs. "This is a long-term solution we're looking at," he said. "I like to see a long-term solution, and we are heading in the right direction with this, one step at a time. This is only the first step."

"No community should feel left out," said Harvey Sookiayak of Shaktoolik. "It's up to each community to look for funding sources and come to NSEDC.... The more aggressive a community is, maybe the quicker it will get accomplished." The AEA has recommended a second-round funding allocation of nearly $2.5 million for a wind project in Shaktoolik.

"At the same time we all recognize that some communities need more help in those areas than others," Harrelson said.

"Have other staff focus on these energy issues and help [such communities]," suggested Stiles.

"It's a big problem," noted Saccheus. "We don't have time to focus on these problems. Another thing, we've got a lot of potential for energy that might be a helluva lot better than these turbines you're talking about. We pay higher and higher costs every year—fuel surcharges."

"Back to the issue before us," said Harrelson. Frank Katchatag of Unalakleet seconded Harrelson's amendment to Stiles' motion, reducing the amount of NSEDC funds allocated to UVEC from $1.3 million to $1 million. Thirteen board members voted to approve the motion as amended, while Naranjo and James abstained.

Changes at Siu Alaska Corp.

The board of Siu Alaska Corp., NSEDC's wholly owned investment subsidiary, adopted a resolution to combine the positions of the Siu CEO and president. This will require a revision of Siu's original bylaws, which state in part: "The President shall be the Chairman of the Board of Directors and, subject to the control of the Board of Directors, shall in general supervise and control all of the business and affairs of the Corporation and shall preside at any board or shareholder's meeting.... The President may delegate the operation of the corporation's business to a Chief Executive Officer or Chief Operating Officer, including executing any deeds, mortgages, bonds, contracts, or other instruments as provided herein" (Article V, Section 6).

The Siu board also informed the NSEDC board of a need to restate Siu's articles of incorporation to ensure that the power to alter, amend or repeal Siu's bylaws is vested in the NSEDC board rather than the Siu board. Siu's original articles of incorporation read in part: "The power to alter, amend, or repeal the Bylaws, or to adopt new Bylaws, shall be vested in the Board of Directors, provided, however, that any change shall require an affirmative two-thirds (2/3) vote of the entire Board of Directors...." (Article VIII).

The NSEDC board approved a motion to adopt the changes in Siu's articles of incorporation and bylaws as recommended by the Siu board. This means that Stiles, who has served as Siu's board chairman and president for several months, will relinquish the presidency to John Eckles, who became Siu's CEO on April 1. Previously Eckles had served as both a Siu board member and as interim CEO on a temporary contract. He has resigned from his Siu board seat.

Eckles, who was born in Nome, said he has been associated with the surrounding region throughout his work life. "I have a business background and the training needed for the job," he stated.

Siu's financial report will be prepared and presented to the NSEDC board following completion of NSEDC's 2008 audit, Eckles said. Noting that NSEDC had transferred assets including its ownership interest in Glacier Fish Co. to Siu in January, Eckles said GFC representatives will give reports to the Siu board instead of the NSEDC board in the future. "We'll have vehicles to report to you," he assured NSEDC board members.

"Where is your office?" asked Garnie.

Eckles said Siu's office is in NSEDC's headquarters in Anchorage, that he resides in Anchorage, and that NSEDC is providing administrative services to the subsidiary that Siu will reimburse. He said the Siu board has met four times. He stated that Siu board meetings are open to NSEDC board members but are closed to the public.

Harrelson presented the NSEDC board with the following options for filling Eckles' seat on the Siu board, the term of which will expire in November 2009. (1) Vote for either Paul Johnson of Unalakleet or Ben Rowe of Nome, both of whom were previously considered for seats on the Siu board. (2) Identify other candidates and take from one to three months to fill the seat. (3) Have staff advertise for candidates, as is done for at-large seats on NSEDC board committees, and take from one to three months to fill the seat. (4) Make other suggestions.

Frank Katchatag said he favors option 3, to advertise for interested candidates from communities in the region. Doing so would show honor and would address criticism the NSEDC board has received for not following a public process in recruiting candidates for the initial Siu board seats, he added.

Noting that only five months are left in Eckles' board term, Wilfred Katcheak said that might discourage some persons from applying for the seat. Sookiayak and Harrelson agreed with Katcheak.

Harrelson called for a show of hands on each option to determine which option is favored by a majority of board members. For option one, Katcheak and Stiles immediately raised their hands. After a pause, Harrelson asked other board members to raise their hands higher, and seven more hands rose above heads. No one indicated an interest in option 2. Six board members raised their hands for option 3.

Elvina Naranjo reminded fellow board members that when NSEDC previously invited Rowe to apply for a Siu board seat, he had said he is fully committed to his work at Bering Air. "So that leaves only one [candidate under option 1]," she pointed out.

"Any opposition to using option 1?" asked Harrelson. No one replied. "If none, take a piece of paper and vote on option 1 for either Ben Rowe or Paul Johnson," he said.

Each board member wrote a name on a piece of paper, folded it and handed it to a staff person, who read each vote aloud as a different staff person tallied the vote. The results: Johnson, eight votes; Rowe, seven.

Harrelson said NSEDC will invite Paul Johnson to take the vacant Siu Alaska Corp. board seat, and if he declines, the seat automatically will be offered to Rowe.

Indigenous summit ends with UN-bound declaration

By Diana Haecker

For the first-of-its-kind meeting, more than 400 indigenous people from 80 countries congregated in Anchorage's Dena'ina Center last week to attend the Indigenous Peoples' Summit on Global Climate Change.

The event was hosted by the Inuit Circumpolar Council, Alaska and presided over by ICC chairperson Patricia Cochran, born and raised in Nome.

The purpose of the summit was to bring together indigenous peoples from around the world to tell their stories on how climate change affects their ecosystems and how they cope and adapt to the impacts. Also on their plate was the development of key messages and recommendations to be presented to the Conference of Parties at a meeting of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change in Copenhagen, Denmark, in December.

However, formulating the declaration to be handed to attending United Nations General Assembly president Miguel d'Escoto Brockmann didn't go smoothly.

By the end of the five-day summit, two out of seven world regions hesitated to sign on to the declaration.

The Pacific and the North American caucuses held back on grounds of language technicalities, but the major sticking point was language of a moratorium dealing with new fossil fuel developments. In its final version, the document includes two options: one that calls for the phase-out of fossil fuel development and a moratorium on new fossil fuel developments on or near indigenous lands and territories. The second option calls for a "process that works towards the eventual phase-out of fossil fuels, without infringing on the right to development of indigenous nations."

However, all regions agreed on the common plight and stated in the resulting declaration that "indigenous peoples are deeply alarmed by the accelerating climate devastation brought about by unsustainable development."

After a press conference that did not produce straight answers from the steering committee on why the Pacific and North America regions didn't approve of the declaration and the moratorium language, Cochran said, "As we started, we said that we are like a mini-United Nations and that everyone in the United Nations does not agree hardly on any issues. We are the same. We represent indigenous people from all across the world with very diverse opinions, however very united in our culture, our spirit and our traditions. It's the politics that get in the way in all of the things that we try to accomplish."

Asia representative Victoria Tauli-Corpuz added that Native peoples struggle to live in two worlds, as traditional custodians of the earth and also as part of the modern world that focuses on economic opportunities. And as such, it is a daunting task that resource developing Native parties need to find an economic substitute to the oil and gas cash cow. However, the arctic region had no qualms with the declaration including the two options on new oil and gas. "The language satisfied the concern of the arctic," said Cochran when pressed for an answer how the resource-rich circumpolar representatives reacted to the declaration.

She said that the good, the bad and the ugly of the discussions would be available as a full report to be released in a couple months.

The declaration also supports a binding emissions reduction target for developed countries of at least 45 percent below 1990 levels by 2020 and at least 95 percent by 2050. "In recognizing the root causes of climate change, the participants call upon countries to work towards decreasing dependency on fossil fuels and also to develop decentralized and locally owned renewable energy resources to achieve energy security and sovereignty.

"We have more that unites us than divides us," said Cochran after the all-night debate marathon last Friday behind closed doors that led to the so-called Anchorage Declaration. In a rather emotional signing ceremony—the Pacific committee member broke out in tears—UN general assembly president Miguel d'Escoto Brockmann congratulated summit participants on coming up with a strong declaration and action plan. "It represents a step in the right direction in changing the dominant mindset that brought us so close to destruction," d'Escoto Brockmann said.

The document starts with the statement that, "Mother Earth is no longer in a period of climate change, but in climate crisis."

The declaration echoes what speakers have testified in plenary sessions all week, namely that the indigenous peoples are the least to contribute to greenhouse gas emissions, yet suffer the brunt of the global warming effects. "Indigenous peoples are living in areas that are the most vulnerable to the impacts and root causes of climate change," says the paper and goes on to affirm "the unbreakable and sacred connection between land, air, water, oceans, forests, sea ice, plants, animals and our human communities as the material and spiritual basis for our existence."

It upholds that human rights and status of indigenous peoples, affirmed in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, must be respected in all decision-making processes and activities related to climate change. "This includes our rights to our lands, territories, environment and natural resources," says the statement. "When specific programs and projects affect our lands, territories, environment and natural resources, the right of self determination of indigenous peoples must be recognized and respected, emphasizing our right to free, prior and informed consent, including the right to say no."

The declaration calls on the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change to involve and engage with indigenous peoples, and also includes provisions dealing with food and water supplies. "In order to provide the resources necessary for our collective survival in response to the climate crisis, we declare our communities, waters, air, forests, oceans, sea ice, traditional lands and territories to be 'Food Sovereignty Areas,' defined and directed by Indigenous Peoples according to customary laws, free from extractive industries, deforestation and chemical-based industrial millions of dollars from CDQ pollock harvest royalties and additional millions from its 37.5 percent ownership interest in Glacier Fish Co., which owns and operates three factory trawlers in the pollock fishery. NSEDC operates a salmon processing plant in Unalakleet, provides loans to fishermen for vessels and gear, funds scholarships and vocational training and provides other benefits to its communities with pollock revenues.

Ivanoff acknowledged the great benefits NSEDC's pollock revenues have provided to Unalakleet and to his family. However, like many residents of Norton Sound and other Western Alaska communities such as those along the Yukon River, Ivanoff sees a correlation between the drastic decreases in Chinook salmon runs in this decade and sharp increases in Chinook bycatch in the pollock fishery. Genetic information indicates that a substantial portion of the Chinook taken as bycatch is bound for rivers in Western Alaska.

Chinook salmon are a prohibited species in the pollock fishery. When they are taken as bycatch they must be counted but cannot be retained, and most of them are returned dead to the sea. The Chinook bycatch peaked at more than 121,000 fish in 2007 and then dropped dramatically to fewer than 20,000 fish last year.

In an effort to reduce Chinook salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery, the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council adopted a management program April 6. The program allows the pollock fleet to catch up to 60,000 Chinook in a year, but includes a performance standard involving complex industry incentive plans to keep the bycatch level at or below 47,591 fish on average over time. The plan, which is subject to approval by U.S. Commerce Secretary Gary Locke, is to take effect in 2011.

Like many Western Alaskans, Ivanoff believes a 60,000 Chinook bycatch hard cap is too high. He favors a simple hard cap of no more than 32,000 Chinook annually. "I had supported an incentive plan before I realized it was just shuffling money among the pollock fleet," he said. "I think a tax would be better. NSEDC does a lot for my family, but we need to find a way to bring money back to us." He said the industry that NSEDC is part of should consider compensating western Alaskans for the loss of Chinook salmon.

Outside the NSEDC meeting, Ivanoff said the Alaska Federation of Natives has requested a meeting with Commerce Secretary Locke in early May, and that if the meeting is held he plans to participate in it. The AFN has advocated for a Chinook bycatch cap of no more than 30,000 fish a year.

NSEDC's Chinook bycatch position

Simon Kinneen, NSEDC's chief operating officer and a member of the NPFMC advisory committee, distributed copies of the motion the council adopted for the Chinook bycatch management plan to board members. Kinneen and Charlie Lean, director of Fisheries Research and Development for NSEDC, reviewed highlights of the motion with the board.

NSEDC board member Joe Garnie said the board had unanimously voted for a Chinook salmon hard cap of 47,591 fish. "Was that brought to the council?" he asked.

Lean, who presented NSEDC's position on the Chinook bycatch issue in testimony to the council, said he had talked with Kinneen and Dan Harrelson, NSEDC's president and board chairman, before testifying. Lean said big changes had come down, so he had testified adamantly for a 47,591 performance standard. "A 47,591 hard cap in my opinion is less effective than a 47,591 performance standard," he added.

"I feel we need a special panel, a bycatch committee of the board, to be able to bring forward the board's plans on bycatch, to observe at [council] meetings and report back to the board," Garnie said. He said he thinks board members should attend council meetings to observe firsthand the concerns of others in the state about bycatch issues.

Kinneen said the council will deal with chum salmon bycatch management in the pollock fishery and with issues related to the Northern Bering Sea Research Area at its June meeting in Anchorage.

"Can board members attend this meeting?" asked Reggie Barr of Brevig Mission.

"Absolutely," Kinneen replied.

Other fishery forecasts

ADF&G's Menard predicts a silver (coho) salmon harvest of 80,000 to 100,000 fish this year in Norton Sound, and William Johnson, manager of the Unalakleet salmon processing plant operated by NSEDC, is gearing up for it.

Menard also anticipates a run of about 1 million pink salmon in the Unalakleet River drainage. Johnson has asked Glacier Fish Co. to send the Northern Glacier, a 200-foot factory trawler, to the Unalakleet area to help process pinks this summer. Rob Wood of GFC said that may be possible if NSEDC agrees to pay a daily rate for the service.

Ivanoff said that 80 to 90 percent of Chinook salmon is caught north of the Unalakleet River, so pink salmon could be caught south of the river without interfering with protection for kings.

"We can say we will fish [pinks] south of the river," Menard said.

He anticipates an average run of chum salmon in southern Norton Sound this year. The onset of the 2008 chum fishery was delayed until mid-July in southern Norton Sound to conserve Chinook salmon.

The Norton Sound commercial red king crab harvest quota will total roughly 400,000 pounds, Menard estimates. "This year, spring will be so late that we may run the CDQ and open-access fisheries at the same time," he added.

Herring camp to operate

ADF&G will run a herring camp at Cape Denby for a couple of weeks this summer because a fleet manager at Icicle Seafoods has expressed interest in buying Norton Sound herring next year, Menard reports. He said Norton Sound has the state's second largest herring fishery with more than 7,000 tons of quota. Earlier he had said the camp would not operate this year because there was no market for herring.

Heavy snow keeps spring at bay in Nome

By Tyler Rhodes

Nome's long-term weather outlook for the next month could be described with that old glass half-empty, half-full cliché.

The half-empty? From what the weather experts are saying, don't waste your time digging out shorts or sandals. Temperatures are not predicted to creep into the 60-degree range anytime soon.

The half-full? With one of the deepest snow packs in Nome's recorded weather history, moderate temperatures should slowly melt the snow, reducing the chance of flooding in the area. "It's probably favorable for us that we won't have a fast breakup," said Jerry Steiger of Nome's National Weather Service office.

As of Tuesday, Nome's average snow depth stood at almost four feet. Steiger said that "official" measurement of 44 inches is actually a calculation based on the amount of snowfall received, winds and any melting through sublimation—rather than marching out to a specific spot to measure the depth with a yardstick.

Given the way the wind distributes the snow in the area, Steiger said that measurement is not ironclad. "Obviously in some places there's 10 feet of snow and other places there's 2 feet of snow. The 44 inches is a sort of average," Steiger said.

Last year at this time, the Weather Service's measurement of the snow depth came in at 27 inches.

Steiger said both this winter and that of 2007-2008 were comparable in the amount of snow Nome received. The two winters parted ways, however, when it came to temperatures. "It's very significant that we didn't have any warm-up to do any sort of melting," Steiger said. "Last year we had a significant warm-up in late January. This year we didn't have that, so that's why we still have a high on-the-ground amount of snow."

Steiger said between Oct. 1 and April 23, Nome only saw 18 days where the temperature climbed above 32 degrees. Normally in that time period, Nome will experience between 30 and 50 days above freezing. "The last time we had that kind of number was 1974/1975," he said.

After a white weekend, Nome achieved the mark of having the second snowiest winter on record. Nome's total snowfall as of Tuesday was 113.2 inches, compared to 107.7 on the same date last year. The previous second-place mark was 112.5 inches. The record, set in 1994, is 128 inches.

Bolstered by cool temperatures all winter, the abundant snow pack should work to continue to keep the mercury from climbing too high. "Spring won't be anytime soon," Steiger said. "It takes a lot of energy to melt the snow. I can't see temperatures in the 50s or 60s when we have as much snow on the ground as we do." Steiger said the long-term outlook for May calls for cooler-than-normal temperatures and average precipitation.

While that's bad news for those who are ready to see the snow disappear tomorrow, a slow melt-off means less potential for flooding. "Obviously there's lots and lots of variables that go into runoff measurement that then go into whether it's going to flood or not," Steiger said. "Mostly you need to have a combination of things."

Additional ingredients in that recipe for flooding are rain and ice jams. "We'd have to have a fair amount of rain to fall in addition to the melting process [to provoke flooding]. Another scenario would be a pretty substantial ice jam," he said. The National Weather Service does not measure the thickness of ice on area rivers.

While Steiger said there does not appear to be a current flood risk, he noted that if a perfect storm of conditions did occur, the area most likely at risk for flooding due to an ice jam would be the Snake River at the bridge on the Nome-Teller Highway. There are a handful of homes in that area.

Other spots in the area with homes that could be prone to cresting rivers are the Banner Creek and Dexter areas along the Nome River. Steiger again stressed that he believed the potential for flooding was low, noting that storm surges from the Bering Sea provide the greatest flood risk to the area.

Homes would not be the only structures at risk if the Snake River were to see any significant flooding. Bob Madden Jr., who works for the state Department of Transportation at the airport, said although it would take a significant event, the runway could be impacted by flood waters. "It's come up before, but it's never shut the runway down—not since I've been here," he said at a Local Emergency Planning Committee meeting April 23.

STILL UNDER ICE—Snomachine tracks can be seen skirting the overflow on the Snake River near the bridge by the postal annex. A rapid melt-off could spur concerns of flooding farther up river.

Nanooks set records, earn medals at state NYO

Breaking a record that was set years before he was born, Nome's Calvin Bell brought home one of two first-place medals earned by the Nanooks at last week's statewide Native Youth Olympics in Anchorage. Bell set the new high mark in the state in the Seal Hop competition, breaking a 22-year-old record.

The other first-place medal was earned by Neka Luce in the Wrist Carry.

The first day of the statewide Native Youth Olympics saw the Nome Nanooks garner three medals. Luce hung in there in the Wrist Carry while Lonny Booshu and Bell ran for 500-plus feet and first place. Booshu had a good hang with carriers Calvin Bell and Mose Charles of the Lower Kuskokwim School District carrying him to a fifth-place finish.

The Alaska High Kick proved to be one of the best competitions of day one, with records set in both the ladies' and men's divisions. Booshu made a personal best of 86 inches, which was good for a third-place finish for the Nanooks.

Total tally of the first day for the Nanooks was nine points.

In the end, Nome's team placed third overall in a tie with the Anchorage No. 2 team.

NYO team results

Vanessa Tahbone: Indian Stick Pull, 4th
Lonny Booshu: Alaskan High Kick, 3rd; Wrist Carry, 5th
Calvin Bell: One Arm Reach, 3rd; Seal Hop, 1st (new state record)

Nanooks nab honors at Dillingham meet

The Nome NYO team competed at the Dillingham tournament the weekend of April 18. Results are listed below.

Calvin Bell: Toe Kick, 1st; Eskimo Stick pull, 1st; One Hand Reach, 1st; Indian Stick Pull, 1st; Seal Hop, 1st
Kyle Clark: Kneel Jump, 3rd
Jeremy Head: Two Foot High Kick, 1st
Lonny Booshu: Wrist Carry, 1st; Alaska High Kick, 1st

BSSD NYO reps recordbreakers

With 500 high school athletes and hundreds of spectators erupting in full-throated roars, no place can match the emotion and intensity of the state Native Youth Olympics held every year in Anchorage.

This year was no different, and the 14 athletes representing the Bering Strait School District again gave strong performances, breaking records and thrilling the crowd.

The Wrist Carry is a painful event that requires coordination of three athletes in a concerted effort. Troy Lockwood of Unalakleet—with carriers Zach Pete of Stebbins and Darrell Takak of Golovin—showed his mental and physical toughness by hanging by one wrist and traveling 611 feet, 4 inches to break the state record and take the gold medal.

Not to be outdone, Beverly Nakarak of Elim took the Toe Kick record to new lengths with a jump of 53 inches to break Renae Ivanoff's (Unalakleet) record. She tied with another girl and had to settle for second due to a number of early misses.

BSSD sported additional medal winners in the following events:

Kneel Jump: Darcie Kingeekuk, Savoonga, 3rd
Indian Stick Pull: Katiya Erickson, Unalakleet, 3rd; Vincent Tomaloni, White Mountain, 5th
Seal Hop: Zach Pete, Stebbins, 5th

HOROSCOPES

April 30 - May 6, 2009

 CAPRICORN December 22–January 19 Watch it, Capricorn. Tons of surprises are headed your way, but some may come with strings attached. Know what you are getting into. The mad dash at work begins.	 ARIES March 21–April 19 Budget cuts begin at work. There is no need for you to worry, Aries. They will not involve you. A clever plan hatches at home. Do your part to make it happen.	 CANCER June 22–July 22 How good of you, Cancer. A friend falls, and you are right there to pick them up. A coworker milks you for information. Be careful what you say.	 LIBRA September 23–October 22 Some rules have to be broken, Libra, and even though you don't want to, you are going to have to dispose of one of yours to get anywhere at work. Good luck.
 AQUARIUS January 20–February 18 Do not, under any circumstance, mix business with pleasure this week, or a relationship could come under fire. A charity event requires much more than your participation.	 TAURUS April 20–May 20 You're running ahead of the pack, Taurus, and all the right people know it. Someone may be eyeing you for a promotion. A road trip brings the weekend to a satisfying end.	 LEO July 23–August 22 You've dodged the bullet long enough, Leo. State what's on your mind, and the world will be at your feet. In this case, nice guys really do finish last.	 SCORPIO October 23–November 21 Pull out all the stops to welcome a new family member, and you will have a friend for life. A financial proposal is on the up and up, but could use some improvement, Scorpio.
 PISCES February 19–March 20 Wonders never cease, Pisces, and you get off on the right foot with a cantankerous buddy. They accept your help gladly. A risky financial venture pays off.	 GEMINI May 21–June 21 What a rip, Gemini. That family member you were counting on builds on you. Fortunately, you've got the resources to finish the job. # Nome-Beltz musicians hit the right notes at state level

The Nome-Beltz music program recently wowed the judges at the Region I Music Festival in Bethel.

Kellen Baker, Martina Painter and Richelle Horner each qualified for the ASAA State Solo and Ensemble Competition that will be held in Anchorage on May 6-7.

Baker, playing baritone horn, Richelle Horner, singing, and Martina Painter, playing clarinet, each received a superior rating on their solo performances. Baker and Horner each earned a Command Performance award and were asked to perform their solos on Saturday afternoon before the entire group of participants. All nine of the Nome-Beltz band students who attended the festival qualified through recorded audition to play in the Regional Honor Band.

Those students were Baker, Jacob Martin, Niki McGuffey, Painter, Keven Rodgers, Jeffrey Rose, Lauren Steiger, Dona Strickland and Brendan Wehde.

All of our choir students participated in the Festival Choir. Those students are Taylor Booth, Cori Eide, Homer, Catherine Pomrenke, Vanessa Tahbone and Iris Wanke-Green.

More information on the state music competition is available at www.asaa.org/sportsactivities/music/index.html.

Hall of Fame honors past and present Alaska coaches

It isn't easy to gain entry into the Alaska Schools Activities Association Hall of Fame.

It is only open to elite athletes, coaches, officials, administrators and contributors—the best of the best. The hall opened its doors to one of Norton Sound's own this past week as Myra (Slwooko) Harris was inducted with several others in the 2009 class.

Harris was a multi-sport elite athlete in the mid-1990s for the Unalakleet Wolfpack. She starred in crosscountry, basketball and Native Youth Olympics. She was selected to innumerable all-star teams and set records in NYO. She continued this excellent record with stellar play at Whitworth College in Spokane, Wash., where her coach said, "Her aggressive and smooth style made her the team favorite."

Harris returned to Norton Sound to teach and coach in Koyuk, bringing the boys basketball team to a level of excellence they had never approached. She now resides in Galena with her family, continuing to lead youth.

Also inducted into the hall was Dan Eide, the current principal in St.

Michael, whose Valdez basketball teams dominated for 20 years in their region, winning two 3A state titles and 15 conference titles.

Richard McCormick, a former basketball coach at Nome High School from 1960-61, was also selected to the ASAA Hall of Fame. McCormick spent most of his career in Southeast Alaska.

Others selected to the hall of fame were: Peter Hilts (Susan B. English, Seldovia); Michael More (West, Anchorage); Stan Smith (Spenard Builders Supply); John T. Jones Jr. (basketball official, Anchorage); and Mao Tosi (East Anchorage basketball and football).

for these grants. Staff are available for questions at the toll-free number 1-888-480-4321 or at 907-271-1414. The Legislature spent a large amount of time this session determining the requirements and consequences of accepting different portions of the stimulus package. It looked originally like acceptance of these funds would leave the state in a situation where it would be responsible for increased operating expenditures which it might not be able to afford once the stimulus money was gone. Our research indicated that the vast majority of the money would be usable in a one-time form. That led the Legislature to send a resolution to Congress accepting all the funds. We still do not know what, if any, of these will be vetoed by the governor. Also, the governor does not have to order her departments to fill out the paperwork required to receive the funds. If she does not so order, there is no recourse available for the Legislature to compel her to do so. I am hopeful that she will recognize our budget and use of the stimulus funds as responsible. The FY10 operating budget was $1.5 billion below FY09. This reduction was forced by the drastic fall in the price of oil (the main funding source for the state). The main point of contention with this year’s operating budget was the forward funding of education. The funding for schools is formula-driven, and the funding of those formula funds for FY10 was appropriated during the FY09 budget process. Last year, oil prices were high enough that we were able to fund two years worth of education budgets. So this year’s and next year’s funding of education were already taken care of before the Legislature convened. This year, even with the $1.5 billion reduction in expenditures, there was not enough revenue to fund education for FY11. The only solution available was to tap into the state’s savings account, the Constitutional Budget Reserve (CBR). This requires a three-quarters vote, which means that the minority—or in this case, four members of it—would have to agree to spend from the CBR. The operating budget itself was adopted unanimously, with no members of the minority objecting. The vote to forward-fund education using the CBR was rejected with all members of the minority voting against it. Very little legislation passed this year, but a few of these bills were of great importance to rural Alaska. SB 88 removes the provisions that sunset the increase to Power Cost Equalization. SB 116 extends the increases to the heating assistance program that were approved during last year’s special session. Municipal assistance was also continued at last year’s level. The House majority, comprised of Republicans and rural Democrats, worked very well this year. Having myself and Reps. Bryce Edgmon, Bob Herron and Reggie Joule together, along with the Republican members of the Bush caucus, has been a strong uniting force, with only one member of the caucus not being in the majority. I look forward to the continued cooperation across party lines for the benefit of Alaska’s rural areas. The 90-day session left us with very little time to do much beside the budgets and consider the stimulus package. It will be hard to tell exactly how the new session time limit will affect the entire process until the end of session next year when all bills not passed will die. That being said, there is consensus among many that the current limit allows neither enough time to consider legislation and provide public comment nor to adequately delve into the intricacies of the operating budget. The Legislative Council will prepare a report on how it is working and will be making recommendations. I look forward to reviewing this report upon its completion. My health has been good this year. Rather than a walker, I am now getting around mostly with the use of a cane and occasionally without any assistance. I am hopeful that I will receive a transplant this summer. I cannot tell you how much your support has meant to myself and my family. It humbles and is a constant reminder of what is so special about our district. It seems that while urban Alaska tends to bicker and fight, the rural areas focus on taking care of each other. I thank you again for the honor and privilege of representing you. Please feel free to contact me or my staff if you have any question or need any help. The session number is (800) 478-3789. If you are out of the district the number is (907) 465-3789. I can also be reached by email at Representative_Ricahard_Foster@legis.state.ak.us.

Governor, will allow the state’s regional economic development organizations to obtain public information from the Commercial Fisheries Entry Commission free of charge. I introduced this legislation so that ARDORs would be able to gather fishery harvest data and economic information from the CFEC in order to assist with trend identification and strategic planning for their regions, particularly those where commercial fishing is the mainstay of the local economy. This legislation does not allow for the dissemination of confidential information, nor does it provide for cost-free custom research. Instead, it ensures that information is routinely and publicly available. HB 88 Power Cost Equalization HB 88 makes permanent the changes to the PCE program approved last year by removing the June 30, 2009 sunset date. This bill retains the $1 per kilowatt-hour cap instead of dropping back to the rate of 52.5 cents per kilowatt-hour. SB 116 Energy Assistance SB 116 funds the Alaska Heating Assistance Program (AkHAP) for another year. AkHAP and the federal Low Income Heating Assistance Program (LIHEAP) provide assistance with their energy bills to individuals who meet income qualifications. SB 89 Retirement Benefits for Alaska Territorial Guard This bill holds harmless the April 1, 2009 reduction/elimination of Territorial Guardsmen’s retirement. It authorizes the payment of the amount of the reduction until the federal government begins paying a monthly federal retirement payment that treats an individual’s service in the Alaska Territorial Guard as active service under federal military law. SB 1 Minimum Hourly Wage This bill raises Alaska’s minimum wage from $7.15 per hour to $7.25 per hour on July 24, 2009. The federal minimum wage increase occurs on the same date and for the same amount. On January 1, 2010, the minimum wage increases to 50 cents above the federal minimum wage, which at that time will be $7.75 per hour. Thereafter, as the federal minimum wage increases, so will our state minimum wage.

Interim Legislative Offices Open to Serve You: Now that the legislative session is finished, I will maintain fulltime offices in Juneau and in Anchorage and I will also open interim offices in Nome and Kotzebue, in order to accommodate your service needs. My main office in Juneau will be overseen by my Chief of Staff, Denise Liccioli, who can be reached at (800) 597-3707 or denise_liccioli@legis.state.ak.us. Tim Benintendi will staff the Anchorage office, 716 W. 4th Avenue, Suite 560. Tim can be reached at (907) 269-0254 or tim_benintendi@legis.state.ak.us. The Nome office number is (907) 443-3707, and we are located at 103 Front Street, in the Legislative Information Office (LIO). The Kotzebue office is located at 373 2nd Street, Pillautuq Centre, in Kotzebue’s LIO. Feel free to contact any of my staff members whenever they can be of help to you. Please continue to send any written mail to my Juneau office address, which is: Senator Donald Olson, Alaska State Capitol, Juneau, AK 99801. Between now and next session, I will be busy spending time with family, reindeer herding, working on my house in Golovin, and fishing and hunting when I can. I may send out an occasional newsletter, but knowing how time can go by quickly, and because there are no special sessions planned at this time, it may not be until next January when another newsletter is done. Just in case, I wish all of you a productive and enjoyable spring, summer and fall!

NOME JOINT UTILITY SYSTEM

Providing reliable utility services to system rate payers efficiently and economically by prudently operating and maintaining system assets in a fiscally responsible manner

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor David Elmore
Community United Methodist Church
for the Nome Ministerial Association
Reference: Isaiah 51:1-6

This past Sunday Morning, we remembered Community United Methodist Church’s history rather than God’s history of saving God’s people as recorded throughout both the scriptures. We do this because by remembering our own history we remember our forebears who are no longer with us and their ex-ample of faithfulness, so that we may grow in grace and the knowledge of God. When we look back at our own history we can come to appreciate where God has been active in our own community. We can see how God has called us together to live in God’s way, and that understanding can help us to live out that calling in ever more faithful ways today.

Community UMC’s history parallels that of Nome. It all started when gold was discovered in Nome. Progressive theology of the early 20th century con-sidered civilizing the people and exploiting the resources of the earth as progress. As part of this civilizing, children were sent to boarding schools which not only severed language ties, but also taught that the Alaska Native subsistence economy was inferior to that of the cash economy of the west. Cultural ties were also broken. One example is the missionary’s suppression of carving and weaving activities which they viewed as pagan but were re-ally more about the Native Alaskan’s telling their story of how they viewed the world. This is an example of while we might have much to celebrate, there are actions of which as a church we need to repent. This disrespect of the Alaskan Native people was not only unloving, but bad theology – if God created humanity in God’s own image, aren’t cultures also created in God’s image? How might this failure on our part affect how we view those who are different from us?

A pivotal moment in our church’s history was in 1949 when the Federated Church and the “Native Church” merged at a time when whites were still re-quired to sit in the lower level of the movie theaters, and Alaskan Natives were required to sit in the balcony. This merger was the sort of prophetic witness that embodies the truth of the Gospel: That God created all of us, and loves all of us, and became human and walked among us that we may be rec-onciled to one another through being reconciled to God who created us.

As we remember our history, we must ask how can we further God’s reign in our community. What can we do to provide an alternative environment for youth to experience God’s presence and gain hope in a way that speaks to teens? How can we as Christ’s Church welcome persons who are lonely and without friends, family and support systems feel a part of a new family, a family of faith here in Nome? As a church, what we can we do make these persons feel more a part of our faith family?

NOTICE OF FORECLOSURE for the Year 2009, listing Delinquent Real Property Taxes for the Years 2006 & 2007.

CITY OF NOME

TAKE NOTICE that on or about the 28th Day of April, 2009, the City of Nome filed in Superior Court at Nome, Second Judicial District, State of Alaska, a certified copy of the foreclosure list for the years 2006 & 2007, together with a Petition for Judgment and Decree of Foreclosure. Notice will be given by four weekly publications of the foreclosure list in The Nome Nugget weekly newspaper on April 30 and on May 7, 14, 21, 2009. In addition to publication, a notice will be mailed, postage prepaid, to the last-known owner of the property as their name appears on the foreclosure list.

During the time of publication of the foreclosure list, and up to the expiration of the statutory period for redemption, the property listed on the foreclosure list may be redeemed by payment in full for all taxes, penalties, and interest due and owing on the parcel(s) sought to be redeemed together with payment for a proportionate share of the costs of foreclosure, including but not limited to, the costs of publication, mailing, and attorney's fees.

The foreclosure list is available for public inspection at the Clerk's Office in City Hall, Nome, Alaska, at 102 Division Street, Nome, Alaska 99762. PAYMENT IN FULL OF THE TOTAL AMOUNT SHOWN ON THE FORECLOSURE LIST PLUS INTEREST, PENALTIES, AND A PROPOR-TIONATE SHARE OF THE COSTS OF FORECLOSURE MUST BE MADE BEFORE ANY PROPERTY WILL BE REMOVED FROM THE FORECLOSURE LIST.

COMMON PLIGHT (above)—Shishmaref's Tony Weyiouanna, left, and Mikaele Maiava of the South Pacific island of Tokelau greet each other last week at the Dena'ina Center in Anchorage where indigenous peoples discussed climate change in a United Nations-sanctioned summit. Weyiouanna and Maiava can relate as both their home islands suffer from severe erosion problems.

have found common language for the declaration.

UN general assembly president Miguel d'Escoto Brockmann of Nicaragua brought the gist of the meetings to the point saying, "It is a time for change and for rethinking our relationships with Mother Earth, including our unsustainable patterns of production and consumption." He pleaded for healthy societies that are not driven by "hyper-consumerism or the obsessive accumulation of wealth and dominance over others."

"We need a reorientation of society in the direction of solidarity, social and ecological responsibility, brotherhood and sisterhood," he said as he ended his address to the delegates.

Capitalism blamed for climate crisis

The Alaska Inter-Tribal Council as well as ICC have close relationships with Bolivia, as the South American country's president Evo Morales is one of the few indigenous heads of state in the world. Morales was prevented from attending the summit—prior to traveling to Alaska, there was an attempt on his life—and in his stead foreign minister David Choquehuanca delivered a passionate speech blaming greed and the values of capitalism for the climate crisis.

Through a translator, Choquehuanca said that the world's system is unbalanced as the dominant culture embraced a culture that places profit and money at its center. He said that life itself is at risk as mankind has learned to live by the laws of man, and has yet to learn by living by the laws of nature that take into account not only the wellbeing of man but also of mountains, oceans, animals, birds and plants. Choquehuanca said it was a struggle to get the rights of indigenous peoples recognized, and it will be a tough sell to talk about the cosmic rights for fish, birds and plants, and the rights for Mother Earth.

Kawerak chair and Elim IRA president Robert Keith said that the Alaska Inter-Tribal Council had a good meeting April 23 with the Bolivians and explained why they are not mincing words when it comes to protecting the environment from first-world countries. Keith said that the Bolivians have strong viewpoints due to large multinational companies with seemingly endless financial resources coming into Bolivia and extracting resources without any environmental restraints. "You can see why the Bolivians had some pretty strong view points on resource development," Keith said.

Keith said that a lot of foreign companies also come in to Alaska to extract oil, gas, minerals and gold, but that he feels that here at least, are some environmental restraints put on developers. "And we have the ability to become engaged in the process," Keith said.

Common plights

Discussions held in front of the plenary room revealed tales of nature out of balance

"We found that we have other relatives around the globe to call upon now."

— Patricia Cochran, Inuit Circumpolar Council

from the high Arctic to the savannas of Africa and to tiny South Pacific islands.

Tony Weyiouanna with the Native Village of Shishmaref found that his village of 600 on the tiny barrier island of Sarichef shares the same plight as Tokelau Islands of native Mikaele Maiava. Both islands, worlds apart, are slowly but surely losing ground in a rising ocean. Maiava said that his island rises only nine feet above sea level and measures 800 yards in width and maybe a mile in length. "The 300 people left there are coping by building seawalls," he said. "But a seawall is just an immediate adaptation program, not a long-term solution to the village." Asked about if the village thinks about relocation, Maiava said that there are no plans for relocation, but many do leave for New Zealand, which Tokelau is part of, or to Samoa, where he lives now.

"Everybody has many issues, and everybody comes to a consensus that we as indigenous people see the climatic changes firsthand and that our experiences are basically similar," Weyiouanna said. "Coming up with a declaration I think will help us and others address climate change."

In Africa, the plight is not rising water but too little of it. Adam Kuleit Ole Mwarabu of Tanzania told The Nome Nugget that his people face problems of drought, diseases and land issues.

"We are experiencing droughts and the spread of diseases, especially malaria due to climate change. Mosquitoes are spreading all over even in areas that used to be cold," Mwarabu said.

He went on to say that there is fierce competition over natural resources, and that the conflicts arise because of the scarcity of water. "Many young people migrate to cities because we lost so much of our livestock, because of drought and animal diseases," he said, bringing up the point of so-called climate change refugees.

Mwarabu also felt that the summit could make a difference. "We see a need of all peoples of the world to come together and create a good future for the next generations," he said. "In this conference we realize there is a need, because we share the same ecosystem, to bring all local communities together to have a common voice on this issue of climate change."

In Hawaii, problems manifest subtler, albeit equally dangerous, in form of invasive species that push the native flora and fauna to the brink of extinction.

One voice

The UN general assembly adopted a resolution to recognize the rights of indigenous peoples in September 2007. But even the UN's good intentions are not adequate, said the head of the 30-member African delegation, Kenyan Joseph Ole Simel. He expressed his frustration that even the UN does not listen to the voice of the indigenous peoples. "We need to revisit the whole structure of UN initiatives and programs," Simel told UN delegates. He especially criticized the carbon dioxide trade, as it would only foster a new sort of colonialism. Simel also said that the UN needs to go beyond government-only contacts and directly engage with indigenous people on the local level. "You have no idea how we are coping," he said.

Although a rift became apparent when two of the seven regions represented in the summit hesitated to sign the Anchorage declaration, the members of the steering committee as well as delegates stressed their common ground rather than their differences. Caribbean delegate Cleatus Springer shared Simel's point of view that the UN has structural limitations, but he also said that he believes the summit has achieved bringing indigenous peoples together and that they reached the point of critical mass.

Cochran added that there is strength in numbers, that dialogues have been initiated. "We found that we have other relatives around the globe to call upon now," Cochran said.

Closer to home, Alaska lacks that unified voice that the Indigenous Peoples' Summit manifested with the Anchorage declaration. "What is lacking right now, is an organization statewide," Keith said. "We need a center voice to deal with these issues. At the regional level in Nome we are able to do that, but that cohesiveness and structured unity is needed on a statewide basis." Keith said that the lack of a unified Native voice weighing in on climate change and development policies for the state is going to hurt Alaska in the long run. "On the state level, there is a lot of interest in development at any cost. But there needs to be a balance between development and keeping our environment healthy," he said.

• Declaration

food production systems (i.e. contaminants, agro-fuels, genetically modified organisms)."

UN assembly president d'Escoto Brockmann left the event with the promise to deliver the declaration to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change in Copenhagen.

In a separate declaration to the Denmark conference, the youth caucus opted to adopt a stronger stance. Eriel Tchekwie Deranger of the Athabasca Chipewyn First Nation in Canada told The Nome Nugget that the youth have a harder stance on many items that didn't achieve a consensus in the larger group. "Because the youth are bearing the burden of the declarations and the agreements in the future, we decided to include uncompromised language that was hard-hitting and set harder targets for the future," said the 30-year old Deranger. "Even though it's just a youth declaration, at least it's on the books." The youth declaration has not been drafted yet, but d'Escoto said he would accept it.

Nome's Karlin Itchoak, 38, participated in the summit as volunteer staff and added that his generation needs to step up to the plate and get educated on the issues. "It's important for me and my generation and people younger than me to listen and pay attention and to become as educated as we can on these issues, because five or 10 years from now we're going to be the ones sitting at the table and having to come up with the solutions," Itchoak said. He said that another aspect of the event was to petition multi-national companies that extract fuel, oil, gold, minerals and that are clear-cutting forests, further contributing to the increase in carbon dioxide emissions and further exacerbating the problem of global climate change. He said that his take-home message from the event is that everything is connected. "What this whole meeting mostly represents is that no matter where you cut down the trees or take oil out of the ground or mine for gold, all of the negative adverse cumulative affects done in one part of the world will impact somebody on the other side of the world."

EPA violations cost NovaGold nearly $900,000

The owner and operator of the Rock Creek Mine has agreed to settle with the federal government to the tune of nearly $900,000 for environmental violations.

According to a U.S. District Court filing May 12, NovaGold Resources Inc. has entered into a settlement agreement with the Environmental Protection Agency for what it alleges were Clean Water Act violations. The settlement, subject to a public comment period and court approval, calls for the Canadian mining firm to pay the federal government $883,628.

"From April 2007 until September 2008, Alaska Gold and NovaGold violated their permit on multiple occasions by discharging storm water into Rock Creek, Lindblom Creek and Glacier Creek in violation of state water quality standards," reads a statement from the U.S. Department of Justice. "The companies also failed to adequately prepare and update a storm water pollution prevention plan and failed to implement and maintain best management practices to control the discharges."

Alaska Gold Co. is a subsidiary of NovaGold. The Rock Creek Mine has sat idle since last fall after NovaGold decided to suspend production due to mechanical and financial shortcomings.

Wind and sun put the arctic on thin ice

By Sandra L. Medearis

Sea ice grows and shrinks each year in the arctic, with the most coverage in March at the end of the cold, dark period, and the most open water in fall.

In the last several years, the ice has thinned or totally melted at record rates. This year, satellite observation shows that thinner new ice is replacing old, thicker ice, enabling various forces to continue to erode the shield that keeps arctic water from warming.

These changes come from variations in the amount of sun reaching the surface, as well as the amount of solar energy being absorbed and reflected off the water. A change in wind patterns lately also shoves ice around in patterns that affect ice formation.

Yeah, OK, so why do we give a rat? Shrinking sea ice affects animals and people, including negative affects on subsistence lifestyles. Sea ice affects global climates. Changing sea ice and navigation patterns have pushed increasing interest in the north and its resources, raising possible conflicts in geopolitics.

Ice expert and professor Hajo Eicken of the University of Alaska Fairbanks addressed these concerns in his lecture May 6 at the UAF Northwest Campus in Nome. Eicken and other scientists outside of Alaska have been working with International Polar Year and National Science Foundation to determine what sorts of information communities and industry need to form sound policies for use of arctic resources undergoing changing access. "We have to think about overlapping uses of the northern waters and plan for conflicting uses," Eicken said.

Recent years have shown smaller amounts of sea ice, making some scientists to think the Arctic Ocean may be totally without ice in summer sometime later this century, although ice will continue to form on the Arctic Ocean in winter.

The thinning and receding of the ice will not be easy to reverse, Eicken said, but we can learn about the patterns and rates for thin ice or its utter disappearance that affects subsistence animals, brings change in lifestyles and raises transportation and international territorial issues. The science community, in partnership with northern communities, hopes to gain knowledge to share and predict effects to enable northern people to plan and

Harvey joins police department, Erickson named ambulance chief

By Laurie McNicholas

Nicholas Harvey was sworn in as Police Officer I at the Nome Common Council meeting Monday night. He has worked as a Nome Police Department dispatcher since July 2008. Proud family members attending the ceremony included his mother, Sandy Harvey.

A resolution confirming the appointment of Vickie Erickson as Volunteer Chief of the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department with a monthly stipend of $500 was unanimously approved by the council. City Manager Josie Bahnke appointed Erickson to the position upon recommendation of the NVAD. Erickson succeeds Charlie Lean, who recently resigned from the post.

The council approved a recommendation by the Nome Planning Commission to charge a fee to ask permission of the NPC to use land for purposes other than its zoning designation under the City's new land use law. The process involves a public hearing on a conditional use permit application conducted by the commission after the City prepares a hearing notice for posting on the applicant's property, notifies adjacent property owners of the hearing and publishes notice of the hearing in a newspaper. The application fee is $200 if the hearing is held during a regular commission meeting, or $300 if the commission calls a special meeting for the hearing.

The council adopted a resolution to approve a contract with Resource Data Inc., to perform workflow and business requirements for the City Clerk and Finance Department. The FY 2009 budget provides $9,000 to retain the services of a computer software professional to assist with conversion of property tax and sales tax records to a computerized system.

A resolution to request distribution from the FY 2010 Payment in Lieu of Taxes (PILT) Program by the Alaska Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development was adopted by the council. The DCCED distributes PILT payments to cities in the unorganized borough that contain certain federally-owned lands known as "entitlement lands." PILT payments to local governments are intended to help offset losses in property taxes due to non-taxable federal lands within their boundaries.

The federal PILT formula calculates pay-

Enrollment continues to decline:

School district requests level funding from City for FY 2010 budget

By Laurie McNicholas

A drastic decline in students enrolled at Nome Public Schools during the current school year is reflected in the district's budget for the coming year, NPS Superintendent Rick Luthi told the Nome Common Council at a work session on Monday. He said the NPS FY 2010 budget is based on a projected enrollment of 659 students, compared to the anticipated enrollment of 731 students on which the FY 2009 budget was based.

Only 699 students actually enrolled in NPS in September 2008, resulting in a $500,000 shortfall in the FY 2009 budget as the school year began. The student count is a major element of the State's education funding formula for allocating monies to school districts. Luthi explained that the Alaska Department of Education and Early Development made up for part of the shortfall under a hold harmless provision for school districts that experience sudden drops in enrollment.

"The State gave us help by funding students we don't have," Luthi said, adding that the Department of Education will again provide some help to NPS in FY 2010. He said the State's "hold harmless" assistance is available to a district for a maximum of three years. Luthi credited NPS Business Manager Jenny Martens and Assistant Superintendent Jon Wehde with trimming expenses to balance the FY 2009 budget and for developing an FY 2010 budget that helps shield classrooms from the impacts of cost-cutting. Wehde will succeed Luthi as NPS superintendent in July.

"We took a hard look at expenses," Luthi stated. "People are a large part of what we deal with. We eliminated positions by natural attrition and reduced some. We've done what's possible. Jon is still looking for additional changes."

Luthi said NPS is requesting status quo funding from the City of Nome for FY 2010. "We know there are a lot of economic question marks out there and we know we must do our best," he said. "We don't know if the 659 [student enrollment projection] will hold in the fall. We tried to be conservative. We don't know the future. We hope the price of fuel will hold."

Council member Mary Knodel asked whether Luthi knows the amount of federal economic stimulus funds the district will receive. Martens said NPS expects to receive $60,000 in Title I funds, $178,000 for K-12 special education, $10,000 for preschool special education, flow through grants.

Martens emphasized that the $371,000 in fiscal stabilization funds can be used to supplement but not supplant other revenues. She anticipates a requirement to place them in a revenue fund separate from the NPS general fund so they can be tracked closely. Luthi suggested using the stabilization funds to replace the boiler at Nome Elementary School.

Knodel asked how much NPS will receive under the State's education funding formula. Based on an enrollment of 659 students, Martens said the district will receive approx-ing to reduce energy costs. Luthi cited current work to reinsulate the entire downstairs level of the 14-plex on the Nome-Beltz High School campus. Replacing the elementary school boiler will save a lot of energy, Martens pointed out. Luthi reported that Margaret Thomas, formerly employed at the elementary school, has moved to the district office to help identify and contact potential funding sources for energy saving projects.

Knodel noted that the NPS FY 2010 budget indicates the maintenance supervisor position will disappear, and she asked whether Charles Richardson plans to retire. Richardson, a foreman with 30 years experience, will advise the administration in selection of a person to fill his position and will train his replacement before retiring in October, Luthi replied. He said Wehde may develop a staff position in the district office to oversee maintenance and custodial work and do federal accounting. Luthi noted that Wehde's current position as assistant superintendent will not be filled after he becomes the NPS superintendent.

Councilman Stan Andersen said

Pulse of Prosperity

There is somethinga bout the plaintive call of a train whistle calling in the distance at night that is both peaceful and reassuring. The railroads are the pulse of our nation's economy. The mighty steam locomotives drove the growth of industry and the development of the western states. Industrial goods and raw materials were transported across the plains and over the mountains.

Something happened about 50 years ago when America became obsessed with Interstate Highways. We lost sight of the importance of railroads. Other nations didn't. The high speed, energy efficient railroads in Europe and Asia put us to shame. We need to reinvent our rails and get back on track for railroad transportation. The Alaska Railroad is a fine feature that can strike pride in the hearts of Alaskans when they watch diesel engines haul long lines of freight cars into the distance. It's time to build a spur of this fine rail system into the Seward Peninsula.

Oh, it won't be cheap. The only thing cheap is the talk about building it, and we've been spending words on that account for over 100 years. Western Alaska has a colorful history with railroads. We need to start thinking about economic development coming our way on train tracks. All aboard! —N.L.M.—

Funding for Denali Commission on chopping block

President Barack Obama's proposed budget for the next fiscal year includes a significant cut for the Denali Commission, an independent federal agency designed to provide critical utilities, infrastructure and economic support throughout Alaska. The proposed cuts include $6 million for the agency's transportation program, $20 million for health clinic construction and $3 million for job training.

The U.S. Senate passed an amendment in the budget resolution supporting funding for the Denali Commission. They did not set a number, Senator Mark Begich's spokeswoman told The Nome Nugget. Historically, funding for the Denali Commission ran $140 million. Obama appropriated $40 million to the Denali Commission, keeping it alive, but hobbled the health clinic construction program. Also not included in the President's $3.55 trillion budget proposal are $9 million for the Village Safe Water Program and $524 in ground-based missile defense spending.

U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski said, "For Alaska's Native people, these unwelcome changes are a nightmare, not changes that we can believe in."

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich commented on $90 million in the Pacific Coast Salmon Recovery Fund, which he wants to go to western tribes and states, including Alaska, to conserve and recover Pacific salmon and their habitat. "Instead, the budget directs this funding for nationwide Endangered Species Act programs. Salmon enhancement must have this funding," said Begich.

U.S. Rep. Don Young and Governor Sarah Palin voiced their outrage over the proposed cuts, alleging that Obama is playing politics with the budget.

Yukon and Kuskokwim communities destroyed, flooded

After a winter with record snowfall and ice depth, breakup of the Yukon and the Kuskokwim rivers destroyed the village of Eagle River on the Yukon and caused severe flooding elsewhere. A massive ice jam on the Yukon River pushed house-sized chunks of ice into the village of Eagle in what was called the worst flooding in 70 years. The village's grocery store, clinic and VPSO office have been destroyed. On Monday, the old village of Eagle, about two miles upstream of the main town, was destroyed as floodwaters lifted and carried off some homes and submerged others, reports the Fairbanks Daily News Miner.

The American Red Cross of Alaska opened a shelter at the Eagle Community School for the 65 to 70 residents who have been displaced. Governor Palin traveled to Fort Yukon last week to assess the situation there. She then issued a disaster declaration for the interior.

On Sunday, the state division of Homeland Security issued a release that flooding continues in Akiak on the Kuskokwim. From there, 37 elders and pregnant women were evacuated to Bethel. Most residents of Stevens Village pre-evacuated, with only 20 residents remaining. As of press time on Monday, three river watch teams reported active flooding in Stevens on the Yukon River and in Akiak on the Kuskokwim River. The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation recommends that all residents boil their water prior to consumption in Aniak, Eagle, Circle, Ft. Yukon, Red Devil, Beaver and Stevens Village. Flood warnings have been canceled for Beaver, McGrath and Ft. Yukon.

AFN to be held in Fairbanks

The Alaska Federation of Natives announced last week that the 2010 AFN convention would take place in Fairbanks. This will mark the third time that Fairbanks is the host after having been the host city of the event in 2005 and 2007.

Eighteen of the 27 AFN board members voted to hold the Native gathering in Fairbanks. This year, Anchorage will host the convention, slated to take place from October 22-24.

Point Lay landed first whale in 70 years

Two crews from Point Lay have landed the community's first bowhead whale in 70 years, reports the Associated Press last week. Whaling captains Julias Rexford Sr. and Thomas Nukapigak caught the whale for the 250-head community on the Chukchi Sea coast. The Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission last year lifted restrictions to allow the village to catch one whale per year. Resident Sophie Henry tells Anchorage television station KTUU that everyone was excited but it was difficult and long work getting the whale onto the ice, inch by inch. She says Point Lay plans to share its bounty with other communities, including Wainwright, Point Hope and Barrow.

Salazar sides with Bush administration regarding polar bear ruling

Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar last week announced that he would retain a special rule made under the Bush administration in December for protecting the polar bear under the Endangered Species Act. The action means the ESA will not be used to control carbon emissions or oil and gas development in polar bear habitat. Last year, Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne declared the polar bear as a threatened species under ESA. Critics of the ruling said that the ESA should not be used to regulate greenhouse gas emissions. The polar bear is a species listed as threatened for climate change reasons.

Palin cleared of ethics complaints

Remember ballot measure 4? Last year's election put a measure before the voters that aimed to impose more stringent requirements for new hard rock mines – especially the proposed mega-project of the Pebble mine. Governor Sarah Palin then opined publicly that she would not support the measure. Brian Kraft, a lodge owner at Lake Illiamna, filed an ethics complaint with the Alaska Public Offices Commission that said the governor's comment may have swayed the outcome of the vote, as most Alaskans voted No on ballot measure 4.

The Alaska Public Offices Commission last Friday voted unanimously that Palin did not violate any state law by broadcasting her opinion and argued that the governor has first amendment rights to state her position. "I appreciate the commission recognizing the constitutional right of free speech and the implications of trying to regulate what a governor can say," Palin commented after the ruling.

APOC also cleared Palin of wrongdoing in regards to an ethics compliance officer with the EPA, the number of discharges violating the permit conditions numbered in the hundreds. She said pollutants in the discharges were mainly silt and sediment, noting that since the violations occurred during construction and not actual mining, testing was not conducted for heavy metals or other chemicals.

"The construction at Rock Creek Mine resulted in virtually unchecked runoff of silt and sediment to important fish habitat. Companies taking on construction projects of this scale need to do so responsibly and in accordance with the law," Michelle Pirzadeh, EPA's Acting Regional Administrator in Seattle, said in a prepared statement.

NovaGold faulted extreme weather and litigation from environmental groups as factors delaying the construction of the storm water facilities, according to a press release from the company. NovaGold said it has since spent millions on its infrastructure to deal with storm water. It says the system has functioned well in subsequent extreme weather conditions. "EPA did not allege that existing storm water facilities at Rock Creek mine are inadequate, nor has EPA alleged that any harm occurred to fish or wildlife as a result of Alaska Gold Company's operations during this period," reads the company press release.

NovaGold could have been fined as much as $32,500 per day for each violation, according to the government's complaint. The EPA's DeMaria said the settlement constitutes the second largest fine issued for a General Construction Permit violation in the EPA's Region 10, which includes Alaska, Idaho, Washington state and Oregon. The largest occurred in 2006 against the Idaho Department of Transportation for $1.4 million.

"Today's settlement shows that the government will hold accountable any company that does not fully comply with storm water requirements," said John C. Cruden, Acting Assistant Attorney General for the Justice Department's Environment and Natural Resources Division. "We expect all companies to take the necessary steps to control storm water discharge from their operations."

MUDDY—This aerial photo shows the Rock Creek Mine in May 2008 as the winter's heavy snows give way to a soggy spring. The Environmental Protection Agency settled with mine owner NovaGold for nearly $900,000 for Clean Water Act violations due to hundreds discharges of silt and sediment into streams from April 2007 to September 2008.

Whiskey-fueled gun offense nets at least two years in jail

By Tyler Rhodes

A Nome man was sentenced Monday to at least two years in prison Monday for brandishing a loaded rifle on Front Street in March.

Superior Court Judge Ben Esch handed Alvin Amaktoolik, 22, a four-year sentence with two years suspended and two years probation May 11. Before the sentencing, Amaktoolik waived his right to a grand jury and entered a guilty plea to one count of felony assault in the third degree. The charge carries a maximum sentence of up to five years in prison and a $50,000 fine.

Nome Police Department officers encountered an extremely intoxicated Amaktoolik on Front Street March 26 carrying a .204-caliber rifle with a round in the chamber. According to the police, Amaktoolik was taken into custody after attempting to raise the rifle toward the officers. Police said he also pointed the rifle at another person.

Police responded to the scene after getting a report of Amaktoolik heading south toward Front Street with the rifle in one hand and a bottle of whiskey in another. After being apprehended, Amaktoolik was transported to Norton Sound Regional Hospital to be treated for alcohol poisoning. District Attorney John Earthman said at the sentencing that Amaktoolik's blood alcohol content at the time was above 0.5 percent, a level that many consider lethal.

Prior to Amaktoolik's sentencing, Earthman referenced several of his prior courtroom appearances, including a conviction for sexual assault. "Every single one of these incidents heavily involved alcohol," Earthman told the court.

Earthman said the recommended sentence with at least two years behind bars would hopefully deter Amaktoolik from excessive drinking in the future. "The sentence is what he makes of it," Earthman said.

Amaktoolik's attorney, Public Defender Kirsten Bey, said in working with the state over potential sentencing recommendations, her client preferred the four-year sentence with two suspended versus a flat three-year sentence. The preferred, and imposed, sentence could have Amaktoolik serving more time if he fails to meet the terms of his probation. "He does think he can be successful on probation," Bey said. "I think this [two-year sentence] does help with rehabilitation."

Judge Esch agreed with the suggested sentencing, recommending Amaktoolik serve his time at the Wildwood Correctional Facility in Kenai. "I will recommend placement at Wildwood so you can get more treatment," Esch said.

Following the sentencing, Esch warned Amaktoolik that the consequences of his actions—beyond being extremely dangerous for the public—could have proved lethal for himself. "This is a situation where you put yourself at risk. It's entirely possible another police officer would have taken out their weapon and shot you," Esch said.

GREETINGS, NOME—Shari Biscotti, Nome Elementary School's new principal for next year, greets Nome parents, students and residents gathered at a reception for her Monday evening at the school.

Nome greets new NES principal

By Tyler Rhodes

Although she may not have known it yet, Nome Elementary School's new principal for the 2009-2010 school year got her first taste of life in Nome before she even set foot on the ground.

As a thick fog hugged Nome and its environs Sunday, Shari Biscotti heard the announcement on the Alaska Airlines jet that so many Nomeites know all too well. With the visibility on the ground reduced to near nothing, she joined the legions of Nome residents who have had to fly over Nome back to Anchorage.

Monday dawned with clearer skies, however, allowing Biscotti to arrive in time to attend a welcoming reception in her honor at the elementary school that evening. Flanked by parents, children and other community members munching on desserts provided by the Nome Parent Teacher Student Association, Biscotti showed no hesitation in introducing herself and her expectations for the coming school year.

Biscotti's comments were peppered with jokes. "I don't take myself very seriously, but I do take my job very seriously," she said.

Biscotti said she was nearly ready to take a job as the principal of the Tyonek School in the Kenai Peninsula Borough School District. A call—actually several calls, she said—from departing Superintendent Rick Luthi changed those plans. "This guy would not let me off the phone," she said. Biscotti said she was won over by the description of the community and its kids.

"I don't work for [incoming Superintendent] Jon [Wehde]. I don't work for the City of Nome. I don't work for the State of Alaska. I work for you. I'm accountable to you and accountable to your kids," she said.

Biscotti was born and raised in southern California—a fact she asked the audience to not hold against her—and has taught and held administrative positions there for years. Before moving into administrative roles, Biscotti taught in a Head Start program, kindergarten and fifth-grade classrooms. She later moved on to a couple of mid-level administrative jobs before accepting principal positions in several schools.

Noting she has worked in public schools for 21 years, Biscotti touched on stories of taking jobs at under-performing schools. Crediting the involvement of parents and the community, she said those schools were able to turn around. "The thing that has made my school a success is not Sherri Biscotti," she said. "What flipped every single school I was at were parents and community involvement. ... If you don't have a home and a parent connected, you're dead in the water."

Biscotti ran with that theme, saying she would devote substantial energy to getting parent participation at the school. She told parents in the audience to expect phone calls among other methods of communication. She even called out to Richard Beneville to go door to door with her to bolster parental interest.

Beneville returned the favor later in the evening, recruiting Biscotti in front of the audience to act in a play should he produce another one in the near future. Needing no time to ponder the offer, she said she was game.

After her short introduction and taking a few questions from the audience, Biscotti mulled about the room, passing from person to person who wanted to introduce themselves or just say welcome.

Biscotti said her initial impression of Nome was positive. "I love it," she said. Biscotti was to stay in Nome through Thursday before moving here toward mid-July.

Piscoya named full-time CEO of Norton Sound Health Corp.

Nome native has served as interim president and CEO since February of this year

By Tyler Rhodes

Carol Piscoya's job title got a little shorter last week.

The Norton Sound Health Corporation's Board of Directors May 7 lopped off the word "interim" that had preceded "President and Chief Executive Officer" on her nameplate.

After sorting through more than a dozen candidates from the area, other regions of the state and the Lower 48, the board of directors selected Piscoya to lead the health corporation. The former Vice President of Community Health Services for the health corporation had served as its acting president and CEO since February.

"I was surprised and honored," Piscoya said Monday. She said she fully expected to be bringing a new CEO up to speed on the operations rather than accepting a contract for the position herself. Piscoya's contract is for one year, which is standard for NSHC, according to the corporation general counsel Rick Helms.

Helms said Piscoya's stint as interim CEO gave the board of directors ample time to view her performance. "It was a good opportunity to see her in the position. One of those long job interviews, perhaps," Helms said.

NSHC Board Chair Emily Hughes said Piscoya performed well in that interview. "We are pleased that Carol has accepted the position," Hughes said in a press release. "Carol has done a good job in the position in an acting capacity."

Born and raised in Nome, Piscoya has worked at NSHC since 2003. She was appointed to be the acting president and CEO after the former holder of that position, Michael Lake, abruptly resigned just before his one-year contract was to expire. Lake took over for Trevor Colby, who served in the position from October 2006 until early 2008. At the time he was hired, Colby was the third CEO brought on at NSHC in the space of a year.

Piscoya's desk on Monday supported several piles of paperwork giving a hint to the amount of work on the new CEO's plate. Tons of steel and construction materials are on their way to Nome to become part of the new Norton Sound Regional Hospital. The corporation aims to move into the new facility by 2012.

While that brick-and-mortar project moves forward, the corporation also needs to direct attention to the digital world. "We're required to have electronic health records by 2014," she said. Piscoya said the hospital wants to make the transition by the time it moves into its new facility in three years.

The health corporation is also working to complete or build new clinics in several of the area's villages. Piscoya said Teller should already be moved into its new facility and Breig Mission should soon be able to move into its clinic. She said new clinics are also planned for Shaktoolik, Gambell, Savoonga, Shishmaref, Wales and Little Diomed. "That should round out all the villages with new clinics," she said.

Piscoya said a continued priority for the corporation will be to work for increased federal funding for the maintenance of village clinics as rapidly climbing fuel costs eat away at the bottom line. She said funding for the facilities has been flat for a decade. "Each year it is a priority," she said.

Piscoya also said she would focus on the recruitment of new staff and the retention of those who are already on board.

Prior to working for NSHC, Piscoya worked for Nome Eskimo Community, Bering Straits Native Corp. and the state Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. Piscoya said her ties to Nome, as well as the travel and work she did in the region while under the employ of the state will aid her in new role at NSHC. "The villages know me, and I know the villages," Piscoya said.

As she starts her tenure as president and CEO, Piscoya lauded the employees of the corporation and the board of directors. "In spite of the turnover of the CEO, we've had a very stable board of directors," Piscoya said.

complained filed by Sondra Tomkins. Tomkins alleged that Palin had violated the state ethics act in forming a political action committee and in traveling to Indiana near the end of the legislative session to make a speech to a right-to-life group. Tompkins also alleged that Palin used her public office for personal gain by establishing SarahPAC.

The governor's attorney Thomas Van Flein said in a written statement that of 14 ethics complaints filed against the governor or her staff, nine have now been resolved. Another five complaints are still pending. According to a press release, Palin so far has spent $500,000 in legal fees dealing with the flurry of ethics complaints filed against her.

Dana Fabe recommended for U.S. Supreme Court

Soon President Barack Obama will face his first appointment of a Supreme Court judge, and Alaska's junior Senator Mark Begich threw an Alaskan name in the ring of candidates. Begich recommended the consideration of Alaska Supreme Court Chief Justice Dana Fabe. Fabe has a 33-year legal career in Alaska and was the first woman appointed to Alaska's highest court. She is currently serving the last year of her second three-year term as Chief Justice of the Alaska Supreme Court. The current U.S. Supreme Court vacancy is due as Justice David Souter plans to retire at the end of the court's current term. Although pundits predict that the appointment is likely to be a woman in her early 50s and among the Democratic Party's ranks, they have not officially discussed the likelihood of the Alaskan justice to fill the position. Fabe visited Nome last year, holding a round-table brainstorm event dealing with juvenile justice and underage drinking issues.

Grants headed to Nome and region

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security, Transportation and Safety Administration has released $1,158,203 to be divided among the Bethel, Nome and Kotzebue airports for explosive detection systems and advanced technology X-ray units that will streamline baggage screening and enhance security capabilities. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development announced Indian Housing Block Grants headed to Kotzebue, $1,054,778, to Point Hope, $377,218; to Nome Eskimo Community, $814,205 and $363,746 to the Stebbins Community Association.

Dan Karmun, a Nome elder attending the ice lecture, cited an example of ice going out overnight in one community, robbing them of any chance to harvest walrus or bearded seal for food.

Solar energy, wind patterns, water flow and the ways of humans on the planet affect the ebb and flow of the ice cover.

Climate changes, including record ice melt in the summer of 2007, have spawned scientific sampling studies in polar regions. Warm inflows from the Pacific and Atlantic oceans by way of Greenland contributed to the extreme ice loss that year.

"2007 rattled everyone's cage that maybe something was going on," Eicken said.

Climate changes come from variations in the ice cover that regulates the amount of sun reaching the surface, as well as the amount of solar energy being absorbed and reflected off the water. Dark, open water absorbs nine-tenths of the heat from the sun, speeding the melt. Ice cover reflects three-fourths of the warmth. Thinner and reduced ice cover allows the winds to blow the ice around more easily so that the ice spends less time in the Arctic Ocean, leading to more episodes of extreme heat. Unusual weather patterns recently with persistent southerly winds have warmed the polar air and pushed ice toward the North Pole and Europe.

"The winds are unusual anymore," Karmun said, "making it difficult to determine how to hunt safely."

Charlie Lean, a local fish biologist, agreed that the ice scene is undergoing a flux in forces. "For the last five years, Kotzebue Sound has not frozen solid," he said. "We used to say that Norton Sound was the ice factory for the Bering Sea. There is not a big ice shelf between [Norton Sound coastal villages] Shaktoolik and Saint Michael anymore."

Lean observed that melting ice had altered the salinity of seawater affecting the region's crab population, threatening them with intolerable fresh water and altering their distribution in the Sound.

Such forces have made the ice more vulnerable to trapping of heat by greenhouse gases, Eicken said.

The arctic is a major influence on global climates. On the other hand, as the globe as a whole warms, it always warms much more in the arctic, Eicken said. There is a belief that the doubling of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere by the end of the century will warm the arctic by more than 20 degrees.

While increased open water in the arctic is opening transportation routes and commercial uses, receding ice is curtailing and changing subsistence hunting established over thousands of years. Traditional food as well as oil recovery depends on ice as a platform for activities. Unfavorable shore ice conditions can and have blocked the launch of whaling boats and hunting crews into whale and walrus migrations. The ice studies under the aegis of International Polar Year and other science groups are working with hunters and community leaders on St. Lawrence Island and coastal villages such as Wales and Barrow.

"If you want to understand how the climate is changing, you have to work with local people and find out what is happening there. It's very important," Eicken said. "Local change may or may not track with global changes."

Karmun gave that a big "amen."

"Local elders represent thousands of years of experience living on those resources," Karmun said. "We need to make use of elders from the Inupiaq community. There is a need for opening up communications with scientists. We have no diploma, but we have lots of experience."

The Public Works department will pick up used vehicles, yard debris and old washers, dryers or refrigerators on request from May 26 to 29.

A picnic to celebrate 50 years of statehood is planned for July 4 at 2:30 p.m. Other events that day will include the 32nd annual Anvil Mountain Run; a parade and games on Front Street; ice cream for all; and traditional games of the past such as catch the greased pig, climb the greased pole to capture Ulysses S. Grant, kayak races, an ear pull contest, one hand stand, head stand, rock pull and people carry. Alaska's 50-Year Celebration of Statehood Commission is the sponsor.

Telemetry study to identify spawning sites of Unalakleet River king salmon

By Laurie McNicholas

A radio-tagging project to track Chinook (king) salmon to their spawning grounds in the Unalakleet River drainage will begin this year in late June and run through July. Brendan Scanlon, Northwest and North Slope area biologist for the Alaska Department of Fish and Game Sport Fish Division, will direct the two-year telemetry study.

"It's a repeat of the 1996-1997 telemetry project on the Unalakleet River," Scanlon said. "Both years showed that approximately 40 percent of the run headed up the North River and the remainder went up the main stem." The North River flows into the main stem about four miles east of Unalakleet.

Scanlon outlined the following plans for this year's study. A total of 150 king salmon are to be radio-tagged at the rate of three to five fish per day. "We'll try to space them out through the run, but if the run is small, we will put them out as fast as we can," he said.

The fish will be captured one to two miles above Unalakleet, mostly by gillnet. A radio-tag (a transmitter with an 18-inch antenna) will be inserted down the throat, through the esophagus and into the upper stomach of each fish, using a polyvinyl chloride plastic tube. This esophageal implant does not require surgery, is very non-invasive and takes only about 15 seconds to implant into the fish. A sphincter attached to the stomach holds the radio-tag in place. Part of the antenna protrudes from the mouth of the fish, but does not hamper the movement of the fish in any way. King salmon don't eat after they enter fresh water.

Tracking radio-tagged kings

Scanlon described strategies for tracking radio-tagged kings. "We'll have one tracking station at the mouth of the North River and a couple of tracking stations up the Unalakleet River," he said. "There are two antennas at each station—one pointing upstream, one pointing downstream. The receiver is powered by gel cell batteries that are kept charged with solar power." At the North River tracking station, the downriver antenna first picks up a signal from a radio-tagged fish, and as the fish passes the salmon counting tower, the upriver antenna picks it up, he explained.

Scanlon said one of the tracking stations on the Unalakleet River will be located below the tagging site to detect any radio-tagged king salmon that may drop out of the drainage. Some salmon sense they are in the wrong river and turn around and leave, he added.

Tracking strategies will include aerial surveys with a wing-mounted antenna to identify the exact spawning locations of the radio-tagged fish. Scanlon cited results of the 1996-97 telemetry study of Unalakleet River king salmon showing that all radio-tagged fish in the North River spawned above the counting tower, and almost none that went up the main stem spawned below the confluence of the Unalakleet and Chi-roskey rivers.

Results of this year's telemetry study should be available soon after the king salmon spawning season ends. "By August we'll have down-loaded the tracking stations and conducted a couple of aerial surveys," said Scanlon.

School Board

the City has a good building maintenance staff that NPS could lean on and a new Public Works director who should be able to help. "We'll take it," Luthi replied.

"Why is there an assistant principal at the high school when there are more kids at the elementary school?" asked Knodel.

The amount of activity at the high school, the level of discipline and interaction with children of those ages requires more one-on-one attention to deal with issues, Luthi explained.

Without an assistant principal, the principal would not have time to be an instructional leader, he added.

Noting that a high school business education teaching position had been eliminated in the FY 2010 budget, Andersen asked what the position had entailed. Luthi said the person in the position had taught accounting for two to three periods along with one or two technology courses and had produced the yearbook. Next year there will be 1.5 technology positions instead of three, and an instructor in one of the remaining positions will teach three technology classes at the high school, Luthi said.

Andersen asked what the NPS social worker does. Luthi said the elementary school social worker has done wonderful things and has coordinated with local staff of the Alaska Dept. of Health and Social Services. A half-time position for testing and assessment at the high school has been eliminated, so next year the social worker will divide her time between the elementary school and high school to deal with students who have problems with substance abuse and at home, Luthi added.

Mayor Denise Michels asked if the State requires a social worker in the district.

"No," Luthi replied. "Counselors are hard to come by and are trained in specific areas." They are able to get help for kids with alcohol and drug abuse problems and shattered homes, he explained.

Councilman Jon Larson asked for information on the teacher-student ratio at NPS. Unable to provide a detailed response during the work session, Luthi later obtained the information and presented it at the regular council meeting Monday night.

Based on projected student enrollment at the elementary school next year, the teacher/pupil ratio will be 1:17 for kindergarten classes; 1:18, first grade, 1:16, second grade; 1:19, third and fourth grades, 1:23.5 for fifth grade classes; and 1:16, sixth grade.

Based on tentative schedules and projected student enrollment, next year the teacher/pupil ratio will be 1:12 for junior high students and 1:15 for high school students, Luthi reported.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz asked whether the community schools position had been cut from the general fund budget and reinstated with grant monies. Luthi verified that the position would no longer be included in the general fund budget, and that Wehde had found grant monies to fund it for one more year.

Noting that the FY 2010 budget allocates $1.3 million for heat and electricity, councilman Jerald Brown said there must be a way to reduce energy costs at NPS in the long run. He acknowledged that shortage of funds is a barrier, but said it makes no sense to keep paying for high energy costs instead of investing in energy-saving alternatives.

Luthi agreed with Brown and said Wehde and Margaret Thomas are working to find funds for that purpose.

Learning doesn't stop at school's end

By Kelly Thrun, Kindergarten Teacher

It is already May, and although school will soon be over, the importance of providing opportunities for your child to be successful in school continues to be of utmost importance.

Recognizing that parents are the first and most important teacher in a child's life, summer is a good time to foster skills necessary for a child to be successful in school and throughout life.

The following are ways that I have observed parents help their children become successful learners. These suggestions can be used over the summer and throughout the school year.

Johnathan L.'s mom makes sure he is on time to school every single day. Johnathan is learning the importance of his education and being punctual.

Sarah W.'s mom whispers a motivational saying to her every morning. This encourages Sarah to always try her best every single day. To be successful, early learners often need reminders over and over again.

Hailey's mom shows her that schoolwork is a priority by writing comments and placing stickers or gold stars on completed homework. Hailey's homework comes back to school completed and marked as a job well done.

Owen J.'s mom comes to the classroom every Friday to check in with the teacher to see how everything is going. What is the new word-wall word this week? What is the theme this month? This shows Owen that his mom thinks school is important. It is an excellent idea to check in with your child's classroom teacher on a regular basis.

Ada's mom has a place for everything in their home. Ada has a basket to put things in and a hook for her outdoor clothing. She has tubs for this and totes for that. For Ada, everything has a place and that has taught her the skill of organization. Being organized is a terrific skill to have in school. It helps to keep track of all your things independently, including your homework folder!

Reese's mom helps him by asking him to recall details such as "who, what, when, where and why" every day. This shows Reese that his mom thinks school is important, and it helps Reese to recall details about his day. Retelling a story in sequential order is a very important early reading skill.

When Bethany's mom has a holiday off from work, she volunteers in our classroom and reads to groups of students. She lets the children pick the books for her to read aloud. She engages the children by asking questions. For example: "Why did all the other ducks make fun of the ugly duckling?" "How do you think he felt when they made fun of him?" Recalling story details helps students with comprehension.

Aver's mom has taught her self Local air carriers were notified and requested to be on the look out for Blodgett during flight over the area. On May 8, Blodgett had still not returned to Nome. Nome Volunteer Search and Rescue and Teller Search and Rescue groups were contacted. Both groups determined that search via snow machine or ground bases equipment would be extremely difficult and dangerous due to the conditions. Weather has precluded an aerial search. Once weather conditions improve search aircraft will be launched to search the area for Blodgett.

Editor's note: On Friday night around 6 p.m. a Bering Air plane with emergency personnel on board located Blodgett 60 miles outside of Nome near Canyon Creek. He was taken into Nome by helicopter but refused transport to Norton Sound Hospital. Nome Police and Troopers took him to Norton Sound Hospital under Title 47 protective custody. He was treated for hypothermia and frostbite. )

On May 6, at 10:00 a.m., AST received a report of a disturbance in Savoonga. A male juvenile was subsequently charged with Minor Consuming Alcohol and Disorderly Conduct.

On May 7, at approximately 5:49 a.m., Stephan Apangalook, 18, of Gambell was held at the Gambell Police Department for his safety due to his level of intoxication. Stephan Apangalook was also issued a summons for Minor Consuming and violating his probation conditions by consuming alcohol.

On May 9, at 7:45 a.m., AST received a report of a disturbance in Gambell. Stephen Apangalook, 18, of Gambell, was subsequently charged with Minor Consuming Alcohol and Probation Violation.

On May 9, at 5:15 p.m., AST received a report of a disturbance in Gambell. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Travis Kaniingok, 23, of Gambell, for Probation Violation.

On May 10, Nome ABADE contacted Andrew C. R. Weyiouanna, 26, of Nome, at a local air carrier in Nome. Incident to contact, 3-750ml bottles of alcohol were removed from his person. Charges will be forwarded to Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals.

Trooper Beat

On April 15, at approximately 1 p.m., Alaska State Troopers and Alaska Bureau of Alcohol and Drug Enforcement intercepted a box that had been shipped to Shishmaref that contained alcohol. The investigation is ongoing.

On April 24, Alaska Wildlife Troopers in Anchorage issued a citation to Clorissia Raymond for failure to return her Nome Subdistrict Subsistence Fishing Permit by the appropriate time per the conditions of the permit.

On April 29, at approximately 11 a.m., Gideon Okpowruk, 23, of Shishmaref was arrested on an outstanding arrest warrant for failing to appear for court. Okpowruk was transported and lodged at Anvil Mountain Correctional Center.

On April 29, at approximately 4 p.m., AST intercepted a bag containing alcohol headed to St. Michael. The investigation revealed Alice Milton was bringing the alcohol to St. Michael. A summons for Importation of Alcohol was requested.

During the first week of May, the following individuals were issued citations by AWT in Nome for failure to return Alaska Department of Fish and Game permit reports at the appointed time: Michael Mayak, Michael Walker, Thomas Noyakuk, Troy Miller, Reece Madden, and Danny Aukon.

On May 2, at about 7:37 p.m., the Saint Michael VPO received a report of a disturbance outside a Saint Michael residence. As the VPO responded he observed Warren Elachik, 29, of Saint Michael, assaulting his girlfriend. Elachik was arrested for Assault IV and additionally charged with probation violation when it was determined he'd been drinking alcohol. Elachik will be telephonically arraigned then transported to Nome.

On May 2, at about 10 p.m., Nome AST was advised Carlson Tingook, 48, of Teller, was overdue from Nome. AST was advised Tingook headed to Teller from Penny River by snow machine on May 2, at about 9 a.m. and had not made it to Teller. A search and rescue team from Teller was authorized and a family member was being the Nome area. On May 3, at about 9:30 a.m., Nome AST was advised Tingook was in Nome.

On May 4, at approximately 9 a.m., AST contacted Stanley Milligrock, 26, of Wales, at a local airline. The investigation revealed that Stanley Milligrock was taking alcohol to Wales. A summons for Importation was requested.

On May 4, at approximately 3:30 p.m., AST received a report that Brandon Mike, 17, of Stebbins, and Michael Pete, 17, of Stebbins, were overdue from a hunting trip. A hasty team was sent out from Stebbins. The hasty team located Brandon Mike and Michael Pete approximately 15 miles south of Stebbins, on foot, wet, cold and hungry. Mike and Pete had encountered overflow and had to abandon their snowmachines. No injuries were reported.

On May 4, at 8:30 p.m., Village Public Safety Officer John Peratrovich received a report of a disturbance in Savoonga. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Martha Kiyuklook, 44, of Savoonga, for Violation of Conditions of Release and Harassment II. Kiyuklook was remanded to the AMCC.

On May 5, at 8:43 a.m., AST received a report of inmates fighting at the AMCC. Tanya Frankson, 21, of Point Hope, was subsequently charged with Harassment II; and Delight Aukon, 22, of Elim, was subsequently charged with Disorderly Conduct.

On May 6, at about 11:35 a.m., Jeremiah Pete, 29, of Stebbins, was in the Nome AST office filling out paperwork and he was observed to have an odor of alcohol coming from his breath and person. Investigation revealed Pete was released May 5, 2009 on conditions in Nome District Court case 2NO-09-233CR, original charge Furnishing Alcohol to Minors. Pete's conditions of release included not to possess or consume alcohol. Pete was arrested for Violation of Conditions of Release and lodged at AMCC.

On May 6, at approximately 2:00 p.m., Kellen Okpealuk, 20, of Wales, was arrested on an outstanding arrest warrant for Burglary I. Kellen Okpealuk was transported to AMCC.

On May 7, at 3:30 a.m., Tenadore Oozeva, 35, of Gambell was arrested after investigation revealed that he violated his probation conditions by consuming alcohol.

On May 7, at approximately 11 a.m., Steven Longley, 48, of Nome, reported that Robert D. Blodgett, 31, of Nome, was overdue from a snow-machine trip. Longley reported that Blodgett had left Nome on a snowmachine on May 4, and was supposed to return on May 6. Longley is familiar with the area and had adequate survival equipment. Weather conditions were warm and traveling in the area via snow machine has been extremely slow due to open water leads on rivers, and poor snow conditions. A friend of Blodgett left Nome on his own to look for Blodgett on May 7.

The selection will be made by a National Board that is chaired by the Department of Homeland Security’s Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). The National Board is charged to distribute funds appropriated by Congress to help expand the capacity of food and shelter programs in high-need areas around the country.

A Local Board will determine how the funds are to be distributed among the emergency food and shelter programs run by local service agencies in various areas. The Local Board is responsible for recommending agencies to receive these funds and any additional funds available under this phase of the program.

Under the terms of the grant from the National Board, local agencies chosen to receive funds must: (1) be private voluntary nonprofits or units of government, (2) have an accounting system, (3) practice nondiscrimination, (4) have demonstrated the capability to deliver emergency food and/or shelter programs, and (5) if they are a private voluntary organization, they must have a voluntary board. Qualifying organizations are urged to apply.

Public or private voluntary agencies interested in applying for Emergency Food and Shelter Program funds must contact United Way of the Tanana Valley at 907-452-7211 extension 24 for an application. The deadline for applications to be received is May 29, 2009.

with real reasons to write. She helps to write shopping lists, invitations, letters to family and friends, even notes to the teacher requesting to be kept indoors for recess. This encourages early learners to make connections between speaking and writing. Kids want to be just like the adults in their lives. If they see you writing, they will want to write as well.

Owen M.’s mom volunteers her time by keeping track of Scholastic book clubs from her home. She also makes it a point to purchase books through the class club so that our class earns free books. This type of involvement supports an entire classroom full of eager readers.

When Sarah K.’s mom reads with students, she reminds them to run their finger below the words as they read. She helps them to pronounce each word very distinctly and then asks the child how many words were in the sentence. She has observed her child’s teacher in the classroom and has incorporated great read-aloud activities when volunteering in the classroom.

Macey’s parents understand the importance of reading for 20 minutes every day with their child. Macey reads everyday and it sure does show in class. Turning off the television and video games and getting down to the business of reading sometimes can be hard, but it is absolutely necessary.

Research shows that the most important variable in a child’s success in school is parental involvement in a child’s education. You do not need to go far to find great ideas and suggestions on how to help your child to do the best he or she can in school. Summer is a perfect time to practice so that they are ready for school and ready to learn. See you all in the fall!

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor Julie Yoder Elmore
Community United Methodist Church
for the Nome Ministerial Association

Reference: John 10:11-18

“I am the Good Shepherd,” Jesus says in John 10:14. “I know my own and my own know me.” What a comfort to know that God hears our voice, but if Jesus/God is the good shepherd, how do we know when we hear God’s voice? For some of us God’s voice is plain and audible, just as if we were speaking from one human to another. For others of us, God speaks through other people or nature. For others of us still, God speaks through art or a multitude of other ways. Perhaps God speaks to us in several different ways each time. For some of us, tears well up in our eyes when we feel a strong presence of God and sense that God is trying to communicate something to us in that time, in that place. For others of us it still remains a mystery. The possibilities are endless.

God wants a relationship with us – individually and as humanity. Being in a relationship with God is like being in a relationship with other people or with our pets. We have to work hard at those relationships. To be in a good relationship with someone, there is mutual giving and receiving, in other words, reciprocity. Relationships change over time. Trust is built, sometimes there is pain and hopefully there are many more times of joy and fulfillment. Relationships change when someone moves to a different city, town or village. Time spent communicating is important whether it be on the phone, e-mailing, texting, chatting, talking, using a web camera. A lot of work and sacrifice has to be made to maintain this long distance relationship. Relationships change when something bad happens and people no long want to see one another. Pets need to be fed, cuddled, and petted in order for a good mutual relationship.

Our relationship with God is much the same. We have to work at our relationship with God. The difference in that relationship is that God will never leave or forsake us. We can work on our relationship with God through prayer, through reading the Bible, through devotional times, through journaling, through taking a walk in nature or in town, just being still in the presence of God. We can be in relationship with God through song or playing our favorite musical instrument. The possibilities are endless.

How is your relationship with God? Are you in tune with what God is trying to say to you in this time and this place? The good news is that even when we falter on our part of the relationship, God sticks with us. Even when we, like sheep stray, God is seeking to bring us back to the fold. Thank God for such a Good Shepherd!

NOTICE OF FORECLOSURE for the Year 2009, listing Delinquent Real Property Taxes for the Years 2006 & 2007.

TAKE NOTICE that on or about the 28th Day of April, 2009, the City of Nome filed in Superior Court at Nome, Second Judicial District, State of Alaska, a certified copy of the foreclosure list for the years 2006 & 2007, together with a Petition for Judgment and Decree of Foreclosure. Notice will be given by four weekly publications of the foreclosure list in The Nome Nugget weekly newspaper on April 30 and on May 7, 14, 21, 2009. In addition to publication, a notice will be mailed, postage prepaid, to the last-known owner of the property as their name appears on the foreclosure list.

During the time of publication of the foreclosure list, and up to the expiration of the statutory period for redemption, the property listed on the foreclosure list may be redeemed by payment in full for all taxes, penalties, and interest due and owing on the parcel(s) sought to be redeemed together with payment for a proportionate share of the costs of foreclosure, including but not limited to, the costs of publication, mailing,

and attorney's fees.

The foreclosure list is available for public inspection at the Clerk's Office in City Hall, Nome, Alaska, at 102 Division Street, Nome, Alaska 99762. PAYMENT IN FULL OF THE TOTAL AMOUNT SHOWN ON THE FORECLOSURE LIST PLUS INTEREST, PENALTIES, AND A PROPORTIONATE SHARE OF THE COSTS OF FORECLOSURE MUST BE MADE BEFORE ANY PROPERTY WILL BE REMOVED FROM THE FORECLOSURE LIST.

Contaminated soils to get scrubbed at Anvil Mountain

Air Force to remove toxic PCBs used at White Alice Communication site

By Laurie McNicholas

The U.S. Air Force is developing a plan to clean up soils contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) at the former Anvil Mountain Radio Relay Station next year.

PCBs are the only contaminants of concern remaining in the soil, Air Force representative Steve Hunt told the Nome Common Council at a work session May 11. Hunt is remedial project manager with the 611th Civil Engineering Squadron. He said transformer fluid containing PCBs was used to service electronics at the relay station and then discarded or spilled onsite.

The manufacture of PCBs was stopped in the United States in 1977 because of evidence they build up in the environment and can cause harmful health effects, including cancer, according to information posted at www.MedicineNet.com. Before 1977 PCBs were used as coolants and lubricants in transformers and other electrical equipment because they don’t burn easily and work well as insulators.

The station atop Anvil Mountain was built in 1957 as one of the original 31 White Alice Communication System facilities constructed during the Cold War era of the 1950s, reports the “Follow-on Remedial investigation Work Plan” prepared for the cleanup project by Jacobs Engineering. These sites enabled the Aircraft Control and Warning system site to link with the Distant Early Warning System to form a cohesive network relaying information to Elmendorf and Eielson Air Force bases. The station was operated through 1979 and declared excess in 1981.

In 1998 the Air Force contracted with Bering Straits Development Co., owned by Bering Straits Native Corp., for a major cleanup project at the Anvil Mountain site. The project included removal and disposal of asbestos and leaded paint; demolition of all facilities, except for four 60-foot high communications towers (antennas); removal, treatment and disposal of petroleum-contaminated soil; removal of other wastes; and contouring and revegetation of the site.

At the request of the City of Nome, the towers were left standing on their concrete foundations. Hunt assured the council that plans for removal of soil containing PCBs from the White Alice site do not include

Senate takes aim at Native corp. contracts

By Tyler Rhodes

A U.S. Senate subcommittee is investigating the practice of handing out federal contracts to Alaska Native corporations.

Bering Straits Native Corp. is among 20 Alaska Native corporations to receive a letter from Subcommittee on Contracting Oversight probing the contracts distributed through the Small Business Administration’s 8(a) program. BSNC is the regional corporation for the majority of the Seward Peninsula and eastern Norton Sound.

The 8(a) provision gives contracting priority to small, disadvantaged businesses. Through the program and additional provisions created by former U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, Alaska Native corporations have been able to receive contracts of limitless value often without having to bid against other entities.

The letters sent from Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., dated May 12, ask the corporations to provide documents and information relating to—among other items—names of subsidiaries, executive compensation for shareholders and non-shareholders, and a breakdown of the number of employees who are and

Tax rates may dip as values spike

By Laurie McNicholas

The total assessed value of real and personal taxable property in Nome leaped to almost $225 million this year, an increase of nearly $27.7 million compared to 2008.

Ironically, Nome residents received notice of sharp increases in property value assessments following the unexpected Rock Creek Mine closure, which resulted in vacant rental housing and diminished restaurant business as mine workers left town. This year’s extremely high prices for heating fuel, gasoline and electricity also have pinched the local economy.

Some property owners have asked the Nome Common Council to offset the big increases in their property value assessments with a big reduction in the current 10 mil tax rate so they will pay no more taxes to the City in the coming fiscal year than they did this year. During a work session Monday, council members reviewed FY2010 budget scenarios based on three different mil rates presented by City Controller Cussy Kauer.

Kauer’s figures show that a 10 mil property tax rate would produce nearly $2.25 million in general fund revenues in FY2010, compared to almost $1.98 million in FY2009. A 9 mil property tax rate for FY2010 would yield $2.02 mil-

Letters

Dear Editor,

I am expressing my thoughts about the recent news about Rock Creek Mine in this week's Nome Nugget. United States of America v. Alaska Gold Company et al – 3:2009cv00090 was reported as having concluded with a violation of the Clean Water Act resulting in a fine for $883,628 to be paid by Alaska Gold Company a subsidiary of Nova Gold Inc.

I would like to know what will happen to these monies should AGC/NG pay the fines? Where does it end up? Does it go toward increasing monitoring efforts or cleanup of the pollution at the mine? Or is that left up to the mining company who promised us that this mine would not pollute our streams and rivers?

Another thing, why was this operation permitted by the government in the first place? If someone like myself can look at the Rock Creek Mine's Plan of Operations and the Environmental Investigation Document, not to be confused with an actual Environmental Impact Statement, and find them both lacking, why couldn't the government officials also find them lacking? Is it because our regulations are outdated? Are we still working off of the United States General Mining Act of 1872 (you can Google that to find out more about it)?

Anyone who is curious about Rock Creek Mine and the permitting process can go to the Alaska State Division of Mining website, <http://dnr.alaska.gov/mlw/mining/lar>

Holding the Bag

We're stuck with hundreds of gallons of high-priced fuel. Such a deal! Nome paid top dollar last summer to buy lots of fuel to power the Rock Creek Mine. We built a new power plant to sell electricity to Rock Creek Mine. Nome Joint Utilities thought we'd make lots of money selling electricity to the mine and Nomeites would benefit by paying less to power our homes.

Boy, did we get sold a bill of goods. We are such trusting souls. We didn't even have a contract to cover our NJU behinds. Too many of us bent over backwards to please the mine. We endured high rents and unavailable housing because of the mine. We put up with speeding trucks and heavy wear and tear on our roads. We got no property tax revenue (the mine is outside of the city limits) and the promise of a honeybucket subdivision. As a community, we got nothing. Hopefully we learned a lesson—a very painful one. We need to keep a close watch on our local government and take an active part in city government. We need an ethics watchdog. We have to kick ourselves into action and encourage folks to run for office— no more business as usual and uncontested seats.

We must encourage our youth to educate and involve themselves in the future of our town. Nomeites are fantastic folks, but we need to be able to recognize the snake oil salesmen when they come knocking at our door. If we aren't vigilant in protecting our interests, we will always end up holding the bag. — N.L.M.—

gemine/rockcreek/index.htm and look it up to see exactly what I'm talking about. Make sure you look at the "Key Project Documents" that I stated above. These documents are what our government officials used to give the go-ahead on Rock Creek.

For those communities that are near the Donlin mine site on the Kuskokwim River that is near being permitted, you might want to check into NovaGold's plan of operations for your area. If it is anything like the one for Rock Creek Mine you might want to prepare for your waters to be polluted as well. <http://dnr.alaska.gov/mlw/mining/lar> gemine/donlin/index.htm, www.novagold.com

As of today there is no Plan of Operations or Environmental Investigation Document listed on the site for Donlin. By the time these "key documents" are up on the website it might be too late to act. Watch for public meetings regarding the mine and attend them, so you are well informed and can have your say in the matter. Demand specific information on the project! Don't let what hap-

Unions and business: Not a zero-sum game
By Vince Beltrami

Sometimes it's hard to forget that we're all in this together. In moments of crisis, however, we must come together on level playing fields to make things work.

Our economy has gone to hell in a handbasket because a wealthy few were allowed to play by a different set of rules than the rest of us. And the problem was clear long before the pain became this severe.

Workers' productivity soared over the last 25 years, yet wages stayed flat. Now, health care costs are through the roof and millions of jobs are in jeopardy. And, as it turns out, the wealth that we created with our sweat was gambled away.

Recent years have seen the largest gap between the wealthy and the rest since just before the Great Depression. Is it any coincidence, then, that this economic inequality has now ushered in the two greatest economic crises of the last century?

Stagnant wages have severely restricted the average worker's buying power. Small businesses across the country are hurting because workers simply cannot afford to buy the very products that they're creating. Already, the new administration has moved quickly to stem the crisis, but as President Obama has said, we won't be able to rebuild the middle class if working people don't have the freedom to form and join unions.

Every year, tens of thousands of workers are harassed, intimidated and fired for expressing a desire to join a union. Even when workers are successful in their efforts, they won't receive a collective bargaining contract almost half the time.

Millions of Americans want to be able to form and join unions, but they shouldn't have to risk their livelihoods in the process. That's why Congress recently introduced the Employee Free Choice Act—legislation that will let

Space needed if shelter to run next winter

Shelter backers urge Nome to think of winter and homeless well before the snow flies

By Tyler Rhodes

Before the snow has even melted in and around Nome, the organizers behind this winter's emergency shelter are already scrambling to try and be ready the next time the temperature dives well below freezing.

For the Nome Emergency Shelter Team, or NEST, that scramble is centered around finding a facility to use as next year's shelter. "If we don't have a space, we don't have a shelter," said NEST member Abby Huggins.

For 22 nights last winter, the Nome Nazarene Church offered space in its building from 10 p.m. to 7 a.m. for those without shelter to spend the night. Over those nights, 42 different people stayed at the facility. Many were regulars.

When the temperatures again next winter plunge below -10°F, the threshold NEST has set for opening, the church will no longer be available as a shelter. If NEST is to achieve its goal of at least maintaining the level of service offered last year—but doing so for a full winter—a replacement facility will have to be found soon.

The part of NEST working to address the short-term needs of Nome's homeless population, which has dubbed itself NEST Now, is looking for ideas from the community on where or how to host a shelter next winter. "It happened last year because people stepped up and came together," Huggins said. She and her fellow NEST members are hoping a similar grassroots, groundswell can happen again. "We really need ideas and things offered."

Isaac Grody-Patinkin, a NEST member who will soon be moving from Nome, said an ideal facility

"If we don't have a space, we don't have a shelter"

— Abby Huggins

would be one that could provide shower and laundry services for those staying there. He would also like to see the facility provide other resources. "We would like the shelter to serve more as a link to social services than it has," Grody-Patinkin said.

Grody-Patinkin is also a realist, knowing last year's shelter and whatever is cobbled together for next winter, if anything, is a band-aid approach to the larger problem in Nome. "Those things are going to be wonderful in time," he said. "But at a minimum we want to maintain what we had this year."

Even maintaining the level of service offered at the Nazarene Church will be a challenge. The shelter was entirely a volunteer effort. Four hall monitors were needed for each night of operation to ensure shelter guests were able to rest peacefully and keep a watch over the building. More volunteer effort was required to coordinate those monitors and round-up supplies such as food and extra clothing.

This year, the shelter's 22 nights reflected an opening date in early March. If a shelter is to open its doors the first night temperature threshold is hit, many more volunteer hours will be necessary. "That's a much longer haul. How do we do that without burning people out?" Grody-Patinkin said.

Another challenge faced by NEST in keeping its momentum moving forward is the loss of a few of its most active members. Besides Grody-Patinkin, Nazarene pastor and NEST member Jeran Marchbanks is moving out of Nome. "We need some folks who are really passionate about seeing this continue," Grody-Patinkin said.

The other half of the NEST equation is a group working on more long-term solutions to the homeless problem in Nome. Fitting hand-in-glove with that will be a community meeting on a detox center scheduled for June 18 at Old St. Joseph Hall at 9:30 a.m.

The regular NEST meetings will be taking a break for the summer. Huggins, however, is still available if anyone has a suggestion or idea for a facility or otherwise. She can be reached at nomesteam@gmail.com or by calling 304-2898 or 443-5259.

While NEST's long-term goal is for a holistic approach to reduce chronic homelessness in Nome, the immediate focus is more simple and urgent. "We offer a challenge to ourselves and the community to get through the winter without one death due to exposure," Grody-Patinkin said.

That work, NEST member stress, needs to start now rather than in the dark days of winter. "Let's remember this winter. Let's remember that really cold week in March," Grody-Patinkin said.

"And let's make it happen again," Huggins said.

Ice shoves ashore in Shaktoolik, no damage reported

According to the National Weather Service, Shaktoolik's beach saw a forceful return of a winter resident Sunday.

The weather service reported Monday evening that ice piled as high as 25 to 30 feet in places along the beach in what is described as an ice shove. "The ice shove most likely occurred when shorefast ice that had broken away in the warm weather and offshore winds of the last week returned in Sunday's storm," the weather service reported.

The tallest piles of ice were reported to be near the village's corporation building with piles up to 10 feet high near the school. Sections of the beach, however, were reportedly completely ice-free and no river mouths were blocked, eliminating any danger of flooding.

The phenomenon is not expected to repeat, and the ice that did make it to shore will probably stay there until the sun says otherwise. "Weather conditions in the next week are such that no more ice advance is expected. The ice will most likely remain in place and indeed melt in the coming weeks of seasonal warmth," the weather service said. "While the ice may be a visual curiosity, the ice shove is likely unstable and onlookers should be cautious."

lion in general fund revenues, and an 8.76 mil rate would produce $1.97 million—nearly as much as the 10 mil rate yielded in FY2009.

Total general fund revenues listed in the draft FY2010 budget for each property tax scenario are: 10 mil, $9,923,850; 9 mil, $9,913,575; and 8.76 mil, $9,911,109. Council members asked Kauer to project the difference in revenues between mil rates of 8.76 and 7 in the 2010 budget. She said a 7 mil rate would produce $383,000 less in net revenues than an 8.76 mil rate.

Kauer noted that a $600,000 decrease in sales tax revenues is anticipated next year. The draft budget for FY2010 includes $4.6 million in general fund revenues from sale tax collections, compared to $5.2 million in FY2009. General fund revenues for FY2009 totaled $12 million, including $1 million from the sale of the Reindeer Plant to Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

Council members spent two hours scouring the draft FY2010 budget department by department, comparing budgeted to actual expenses in the FY2009 budget and suggesting cuts in the proposed FY2010 budget. They made numerous inquiries about current and projected expenditures, and asked Kauer and City Manager Josie Bahnke to obtain the requested information for them. Council member Mary Knodel said she is trying to get the FY2010 budget down to a 7 mil property tax basis.

The council will hold another budget work session at noon May 26.

Noting that much discussion had centered on projected Public Works Department expenses for equipment and tasks such as snow removal, Randy Pomeranz suggested that Public Works personnel be asked to attend the work session. A regular council meeting is scheduled May 26 at 7:30 p.m.

Mayor Denise Michels and councilman Neal Foster were absent from the Monday work session.

demolition of the towers.

Removing contaminated soils

Accompanying Hunt to the council meeting were Stephen Witzmann and Vanessa Angel of Jacobs Engineering. The firm has investigated the Anvil Mountain White Alice site and developed a plan for removal of PCB-contaminated soils. Under current state regulations, the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation requires a cleanup level of one part per million (1 mg/kg) for soils contaminated with PCBs, Hunt noted.

Hunt used a PowerPoint presentation to show the levels and quantities of PCB contamination in various locations at the Anvil Mountain site. He said the site contains 2,700 cubic yards of soils with PCB contamination of 1 mg/kg to more than 10 mg/kg; 600 cubic yards of soils with PCB contamination of 10 mg/kg to more than 50 mg/kg; and 500 cubic yards of soil with PCB contamination of more than 50 mg/kg.

Hunt said project planners have considered several alternatives for the cleanup project and currently favor alternative 6—grain-size screening and offsite disposal of all PCB-contaminated soil above 1 mg/kg. Implementing this alternative will cost just over $4 million, and sorting out large particles that don't need to be shipped off-site will save money, he added.

"PCBs are small molecules that sick to the soil surfaces on a microscopic level," reads a page in Hunt's presentation. "Because of the ratio of surface area to total volume, the majority of PCB contamination is associated with fine material, silts and sands, while only a small fraction of the original contamination is associated with the larger material. After the material size screening is complete, the larger material will be tested to confirm it contains less than 1 mg/kg PCBs and then used as backfill."

Council member Mary Knodel asked where contaminated soils removed from the site will be taken. Witzmann said the soils would be barged to Washington state and placed in a toxic substance control landfill.

Hunt said PCBs are insoluble in water, but are toxic if they are ingested. Soils contaminated with PCBs are a potential problem for persons who drive ATVs over them, raise dust and breathe it, he added.

Knodel suggested that signs be posted at the site warning ATV drivers of that hazard. Hunt agreed to do so.

Knodel asked at what depth PCB-contaminated soils will be removed from the site. The depth of soil removal will vary, Hunt replied, noting that bedrock appears on the surface in some locations. Soil removal will occur at a maximum depth of six to seven inches beneath the surface, he added.

Councilman Stan Andersen asked whether the cleanup project will go out to bid. Hunt said the Air Force has the in-house capability to do the job, but can opt to bid for contractors. If the project is done in-house, the Air Force will rely on Nome for heavy equipment operators and for lodging and meal accommodations, he added.

Hunt said a feasibility study for the project will be completed and released for public comment in a few months, and removal of PCB-contaminated soils from the site is scheduled for summer 2010. The remedy will be selected in accordance with the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act, commonly known as Superfund.

that back-of-the-packers are pressured to keep moving in the race. And he said the pressure to keep moving might have contributed to the death of a dog in musher Lou Packer's team.

Packer, also a rookie, had two dogs die in a blizzard. He had his lawyer send letters to those who suggest a more capable musher might have avoided the dog deaths. He points the blame at the Iditarod Trail Committee.

Race marshal Mark Nordman said no musher would be kicked out of the race for making a decision that was in the best interests of his dogs. Loveman's dogs, Nordman said, were in great shape when the rookie driver was ousted. By the time the race marshal pulled Loveman, a 52-year-old Montanan, he had slipped to the very back of the pack and faced the long, desolate and difficult 90-mile trail to the ghost town of Iditarod alone with his team. Out in front of him on the trail, 47-year-old Kurt Reich from Divide, Colo., was already in trouble. Another rookie, he eventually had to be rescued from a cabin by Iditarod officials who found him seriously hypothermic.

Packer's two dogs died when he got pinned down on the trail in bad weather. His attorney, Ward Mendes from Fairbanks, is now questioning whether the Iditarod did enough to support him and other back-of-the-packers. In a letter to race veteran Diana Moroney, a longtime volunteer and Iditarod Air Force pilot this year, Mendes blames the Iditarod Trail Committee for failing to adequately monitor the progress of tail-end mushers, arguing that this is why Packer, Blake Matray from Fairbanks and Kim Darst from New Jersey ended up in trouble. Nordman said the race works hard to help rookies prepare for what they will be getting into, but race officials can't hold everyone's hand while they are on the trail.

Palin pushes for Kensington Mine development

At the direction of Gov. Palin, the state Department of Law filed a supplemental brief last week with the U.S. Supreme Court supporting development of the Kensington Mine near Juneau. The mine is under fire because it proposed to dump mine tailings into Lower Slate Lake and obtained Army Corps of Engineers permits to do so.

The Southeast Alaska Conservation Council filed a lawsuit, which alleged that the Corps violated federal law by the issuing permits. The U.S. District Court upheld the Corps permit, but in May of 2007, the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the Corps violated the Clean Water Act when it issued a "fill material" permit to Coeur Alaska to discharge 210,000 gallons per day of tailings slurry into the lake.

SEACC maintains that the discharge would kill all the fish and most other aquatic life in the lake for at least the duration of mining activity, and recovery of the "lake" would take several decades. An appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court followed the 9th Circuit Court decision, and the state intervened to assist mine owner Coeur-Alaska and the Corps in defending the permit.

The Kensington Mine site is a proposed underground gold mine located near Berners Bay, 45 air miles north of Juneau.

Court imposes deadline on walrus protection ruling

A federal judge on Monday approved a settlement between the Center for Biological Diversity and the U.S.

Fish and Wildlife Service. The ruling requires FWS to investigate whether the Pacific walrus warrants the protections of the Endangered Species Act. Under the settlement, FWS must make an initial finding on the center's petition requesting protection of the walrus by September 10, 2009. A subsequent decision as to whether the species should be protected has to be issued in 2010.

The center petitioned FWS to protect the Pacific walrus in February 2008 and filed a lawsuit late last year when the agency refused to process the petition. FWS officials told The Nome Nugget earlier this year that the agency did not have enough funds or resources to investigate the status of the walrus to meet the 90-day finding deadline.

The primary threat to the walrus is the loss of its sea-ice habitat in the face of global warming, say lawyers for the center. Listing under the Endangered Species Act would grant broad protection to the Pacific walrus. The sticking points are that this would include a requirement that U.S. federal agencies ensure that any action they carry out, authorize, or fund would not jeopardize the continued existence of Pacific walruses or adversely modify their habitat.

The statute also requires the Secretary of the Interior to prepare and implement recovery plans for listed species. Lawyers for the center maintain that listing of the walrus would not affect subsistence harvest of the species by Alaska Natives. Interior Secretary Ken Salazar is currently reviewing whether to defend the Chukchi leases as well as other Bush-era regulations authorizing oil companies to harass walrus and polar bears. Salazar agreed with the former administration to limit protections for the polar bear and in a court filing defended the validity of the Chukchi Sea oil and gas leases.

Passports required

The law requiring all U.S. citizens and foreign nationals to present a passport or other document when entering the United States goes into effect June 1 reminds Sen. Begich's office. The law will require Alaskans crossing in and out of Canada to present the appropriate documents.

The Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 requires travelers coming into the United States through a land or sea border to provide proof of both citizenship and identity. In addition to a passport, other valid documents include a Passport Card or a TRUSTED Traveler Card (NEXUS, SENTRI, FAST). If children under age 16 don't have an accepted document, they will need to present an original or copy of their birth certificate or other proof of citizenship.

Sitnasuak re-elects three to board, seats one new member

Trudy Sobocienski serving as interim CEO

By Tyler Rhodes

Sitnasuak Native Corp. returned three board members to their positions and seated a new member at its annual meeting May 9 in Nome.

Re-elected to the board were Homer Hoogendorn, Neal Foster and Andrew Miller Jr.

Newly elected to the board was Janice Doherty. All were elected to serve three-year terms.

Also running for seats, according to the corporation's proxy statement sent out before the meeting, were Louise (Keller) Bauman and Robert Fagerstrom. Fagerstrom was the corporation's president and chief executive officer, and was a board member since 1979.

Board member Trudy Sobocienski is currently serving as the interim president and CEO. "We're working with the board on the next steps," Sobocienski said as to the process of determining a permanent replacement for the position. To that end, Sitnasuak is running an advertisement in this week's Nome Nugget soliciting for the position. It is asking that applications be sent before July 1.

Officials with the corporation would not comment on how or why Fagerstrom left the position. Fagerstrom, who would only say he works for a Sitnasuak subsidiary which he would not identify, also did not wish to comment on the change in leadership.

In addition to Sobocienski, other current board members who were not up for re-election at the last meeting are Jacob Ahwinona, Helen Bell, Crystal Andersen-Booth, Perry Mendenhall, Jeannie Yuman and Wendell (Mike) Wassmann.

Andersen-Booth is serving as board chair. Foster is serving as the first vice chair, Wassmann as second vice chair, Yuman as treasurer and Doherty is serving as secretary.

McCaskill is the chair of the Subcommittee on Contracting Oversight, a subcommittee of the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs. A May 29 deadline was set for the requested information, giving the corporations just 13 business days to compile the data.

A hearing on the matter is scheduled for July 16 before the subcommittee.

BSNC President and CEO Tim Towarak said the corporation is not worried about any immediate effects as a result of the investigation. "We're probably one of the smaller contractors through the 8(a) program," he said.

Despite being a small player, the program has played a huge role in developing the corporation's bottom line, Towarak said. "It's been major cause of our [revenue] increase," he said. "When I first got here we were doing $9 million a year, and last year we did $113 million. That's phenomenal growth for a small corporation, and it's been because of the 8(a) program."

In its 2008 annual report, BSNC lists six of its 11 subsidiaries as participating in the 8(a) program. Among those are companies that provide administrative, technical, aerospace and logistics support. The contracts are for work all across the nation.

The regional corporation emerged from bankruptcy in 1989 and has been posting record profits in recent years. Contract work has played an important role in that turnaround. "Our total gross income increased by about 50 percent over the prior year because we increased our contracts revenues from around $64.9 million to $99.5 million," reads the message to shareholders from Towarak and Chairman Henry Ivanoff in the 2008 report. Towarak said nearly all of that contract work was procured through the 8(a) program.

The probe has solicited a quick response from Alaska's senators. Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Mark Begich sent a letter in response to McCaskill May 15, voicing concern over the investigation. "While we welcome fair and just oversight of the Native American 8(a) program to ensure its integrity, transparency, and accountability, we are also concerned that [Alaska Native corporations] will be inadvertently harmful," reads the letter.

In their letter, the Alaska senators ask that the deadline be extended to "a more reasonable 30 business days," and note that the inspector general of the SBA is already conducting an audit of the subcontracting practices of the Native corporations which they expect to be released in June.

BSNC's Towarak said the corporation should be able to meet the deadline, but will have to sideline other projects to do so. "I think we can do it because we don't have as many contracts as some of the large contractors, but we'd prefer to have more time," he said.

Towarak said BSNC's participation in the contracting program has come at a measured pace. "We have been doing it very slowly and deliberately because of our financial history," he said. "We didn't want to take any chances. We wanted to be very conservative in our approach to taking new work." As the corporation has become more successful and robust financially, as well as more experienced in contract work, Towarak said BSNC has become a bit more aggressive in its contract work over the past few years.

In their defense of the program, Begich and Murkowski argue that the contracting program is vital to encouraging private-sector business development in some of the most economically depressed areas of the nation. "Thus far, the [Alaska Native corporations] have benefited the indigenous people of Alaska (the shareholders) enormously and have set Alaska Native people on the path toward economic development by infusing rural communities with dividends, employment opportunities, scholarship programs, land management, cultural and social programs and numerous other benefits for the Alaska Native shareholders," the letter reads.

Towarak agrees that the program has given a needed boost to the corporations. "We just hope that the Congress understands that it has been very beneficial to all Alaska Native corporations," he said.

Towarak noted that despite the fact that all the 13 regional corporations have participated in the 8(a) program, the majority of the approximately 200 corporations representing villages and smaller communities have not done so. "It takes a lot of capital and a lot of work to get into it. If the program goes away they would have lost the opportunity," he said.

Other entities have argued that the contracts have come at the expense of other disadvantaged groups, some of which have faced caps on the size of contracts available under the 8(a) program. The contracts often cover work at military installations and other federal facilities. Reports estimate that the contracts reach into the billions in value annually.

In addition to BSNC, corporations receiving the letters were: Ahtna Inc., Arctic Slope Regional Corp., Bristol Bay Native Corp., Calista Corp., Chugach Alaska Corp., Cook Inlet Region Inc., Doyon Ltd., Konniak Inc., NANA Regional Corp., Sealaska Corp., The 13th Regional Corp., Afognak Native Corp., Tyonek Native Corp., Cape Fox Corp., Chenega Corp., Eyak Corp., Goldbelt Inc., Olgoonik Corp. and The Aleut Corp.

Crews continue to clear snow off area highways

The Alaska Department of Transportation reported Monday that its crews are working at mile 48 of the Bob Blodgett Nome-Teller Highway to repair washouts. The road is open to Teller, however, the department warns that it is passable only with four-wheel drive vehicles and those travelling the route are doing so at their own risk.

To the east, the department reported the Nome-Council Highway was open to mile 40 as of Monday. The Kougarok Road was open to mile 36 as of Monday.

The department reported that the roads are currently soft and rutted.

Impasse reached between teachers, administration

By Janet Ahmasuk

It was announced at the last Nome Board of Education meeting May 12 that the Nome Education Association and Nome Public Schools have reached a point of impasse in negotiations for a new certified employment contract. The Federal Mediation Services Office has been contacted to provide assistance in the process of moving negotiations forward.

The last best offer of the district for a three-year contract that includes a salary increase of 6 percent over the next three years. As proposed, salaries would increase by 1.5 percent in year one, 2 percent in year two and 2.5 percent during the third year.

The Nome Education Association's last counter proposal was for a one-year contract that includes an increase of 1.5 percent and a decrease of two days to the teachers' work year.

The Classified Employees Association did reach successful negotiations, and the classified document is ready for ratification. By all accounts it was a smooth process.

Nome Elementary School new principal, Shari Biscotti, was introduced at the meeting. She loves it here, she says, and is looking forward to next fall. She has 20 years of education experience as teacher and principal. Presently she is a professor at Cal State University in San Bernardino, Calif.

High School Principal Janeen Sullivan presented special recognition awards of Nome Nanook blue vests with school logo to coaching staff who received awards at the state athletic tournaments. Honored were Lieudell Goldsberry who was named wrestling coach of the year, Duke McGuffey who was named assistant wrestling coach of the year, Pat Callahan who was named boys basketball 3A Coach of the Year, and Rebecca Callahan who was named as the girls cheer coach of the year for the region.

Nome-Beltz Assistant Principal Doug Boyer presented April-May Students of the Month. The junior high student of the month for May was Eli Johnson, who was described as friendly, hard-working and noted for staying on task. April high school student of the month was Beth Herzon, who was nominated by her Spanish teacher.

The May high school student of the month is Miles Reader and the April junior high student of the month was Katherine Ivanoff.

Student representative report

Choir and band spring concert was held May 5. Richelle Horner, Martina Painter and Kellen Baker continued on to state for their superior ratings in singing and band.

The Friends of Rachel Club has ended and the students are excited to join next year.

Seniors third hour media class is starting to work on the senior slideshow and scholarship packets.

The decorations for graduation have been ordered.

The Junior Prom was held May 1 with the theme "Las Vegas."

The last pep assembly of the year was Friday, May 15 in honor of the seniors' last day.

Report form NES Principal Carl White

NES has received $18,000 from Nome Eskimo Community for the breakfast program. The support from NEC is very appreciated.

Fourth quarter and end-of-the-year perfect attendance for the entire year will be at the assembly on the last day of school at 9 a.m. There will also be a slide show of all the fun and learning that goes on at Nome Elementary School.

Parents can now register future Kindergarten students for the 2009-10 school year. This is for children who will be 5 years old by Aug. 31.

Parents are advised to look in the lost-and-found box if their child is missing some clothes, gloves, boots, coats, hats, etc. All items remaining at the end of the school year will be given to charity.

The last day of school is May 22. Kindergarten through third grade will be dismissed at 12:30 p.m.; forth through sixth grade will be dismissed at 1:30 p.m. At 9 a.m. there will be an all school assembly. Sixth grade promotion will be at 12:45 p.m.

Notes from Anvil City Science Academy

The eighth graders returned this past weekend from their trip to Washington, D.C. Highlights included meeting with U.S. Sens. Lisa Murkowski and Mark Begich, touring the White House, and observing the U.S. Senate in session. Students shared their experiences on a blog that can be viewed on the school website. Pictures will be posted in a week or so.

ACSA Artists in Schools program has begun. Students will be working with brother and sister Ryan and Sarah Conarro over the next two weeks in preparation for the dramatic production entitled "Nometown Tales." The final performance will take place at 7 p.m., May 22 at the Nome Elementary School Commons.

The formal application process has ended. In May the ACSA APC held a lottery drawing to determine enrollment for the 2009/10 school year. Letters informing applicants of their acceptance or placement on a waiting list were mailed May 12. Eleven new students have been accepted, with nine placed on a waiting list.

Board members open discussion

Board President Gloria Karmun asked about the current assistant superintendent position now held by incoming Superintendent Jon Wehde. Would it be continued or eliminated? She was in favor of a Native education program to replace it.

Wehde said that funding for Native education has changed drastically. Karmun suggested a partnership with Nome Eskimo Community might be a worthwhile effort to strengthen the program.

Board member Barb Nickels wants to see a grant writer position created and does not agree totally with a Native education program.

Nickels also added that she works with the Parent Advisory Committee that meets quarterly.

Board member Betsy Brennan does not see neglect on Native programs. She also commented that adding Native education to the superintendent position might be putting too much on the position.

Outgoing Superintendent Rick Luthi added that hiring someone else to restructure the Native education program might be the way to go.

Board Member Albert McComas wanted the issue of the Northwest Alaska Career and Technology Education Center (NACTEC) vis-à-vis Nome students added to the

Troopers, Eddie Eagle promote gun safety

By Gloria Ann Karmun

"If you see a gun: STOP! Don't Touch. Leave the Area. Tell an Adult." Numerous Nome Preschool and Kawerak Headstart children listened attentively as "Eddie the Eagle" recently visited their respective school sites to promote gun safety education.

Nome resident Steve Smith says the program presentation is strictly voluntary and sponsored by the National Rifle Association. Locally the Friends of the NRA host several fundraisers to promote gun safety and shooting sports.

According to the Volunteer Handbook, "The Eddie Eagle GunSafe Program was developed in 1988 to teach children in pre-kindergarten through sixth grade what to do should they come upon an unsecured firearm. Eddie Eagle, the program mascot, serves as a positive role model to millions of children each year, teaching a simple, yet powerful, safety message."

Alaska State Trooper Sergeant Andrew Merrill, Nome post supervisor accompanied Eddie the Eagle and his assistant John Harland. The children viewed a short video, had a question and answer session, and received gunlocks provided by the Alaska State Troopers for each of their households.

Nickels to join NSEDC Education Foundation

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. has hired Barb Nickels as the President and Executive Director of its education foundation.

The NSEDC Education Foundation Board of Directors announced Nickels' selection May 14. Nickels, a member of the Nome Board of Education, previously worked at Kawerak Inc. as its Director of Community Planning and Development.

She is to begin her tenure with the foundation on June 15.

The foundation is a nonprofit corporation established solely to provide education opportunities for residents of the Norton Sound region, according to a press release issued by the foundation.

Nome Sportsman's Association on target

A new association has been formed in support of a community shooting range for Nome.

The Nome Sportsman's Association held its first meeting April 28, electing officers and initiating several projects. The association lists its purpose as operating a safe shooting facility for use by its members, other organizations deemed appropriate and the general public. The group also plans to offer firearms training to promote proper handling and safety.

Steve Smith will head the group as president. Other board members are vice president Jeff Darling, secretary Lauri Harlan, treasurer Bruce Klein, Howard Apple, Tok Tozier, Brian Hensley and Keith Conger. Stan Piscoya has been appointed range manger.

Membership in the organization is open to anyone who is not prohibited by current law from owning a firearm.

The association's next meeting is scheduled for May 26 at 6:30 p.m. at the National Guard Armory.

Skate park lands Tony Hawk Foundation grant

The Golden Beach Skaters, the group working to establish a skate park for Nome, has been awarded a $5,000 grant from the Tony Hawk Foundation.

According to skate park backer Kendra Nichols, the funds will go toward the pouring of concrete or laying of asphalt for the skate park's foundation surface. "We're getting close to the amount we need," Nichols said.

Last year the park got its start with the arrival of ramps and other equipment, which are now just waiting for solid ground on which to sit, so skaters can use them. Skater and bikers—both young and old—got a taste of what's to come late last sum-

HOROSCOPES

May 21 - 27, 2009

 CAPRICORN December 22–January 19	The well is all dried up, Capricorn, and you're all out of ideas. No problem. A well-deserved break will get the creative juices flowing again.	 ARIES March 21–April 19	On your mark, Aries, get set, go. That's the theme of this week. You will have to move quickly to get things done. A sweet surprise puts you on cloud nine.	 CANCER June 22–July 22	Victory is yours at work, and you receive permission to implement that special project, Cancer. A web of deception begins to build at home. Put a stop to it.	 LIBRA September 23–October 22	A friend's health crisis passes. Invite them over for a little celebration, Libra. News from home motivates you to help out another. A phone call proves enlightening.
 AQUARIUS January 20–February 18	Oh my, Aquarius. A young friend gets into a heap of trouble. Be there for them, but don't pull strings to get them off the hook. There is a lesson to be learned.	 TAURUS April 20–May 20	Chore list building up at home, Taurus? Delegate and don't be afraid to pitch a fit when needed. A dream is within reach. Go for it and make it happen!	 LEO July 23–August 22	Home improvement plans spiraling out of control, Leo? Relax. Help will come from an unlikely source. A new source of income develops. Use it to your advantage.	 SCORPIO October 23–November 21	Drat, Scorpio. Transportation issues continue. Think outside of the box, and the perfect solution will emerge. Reaching a financial goal requires careful planning.
 PISCES February 19–March 20	An opportunity resurfaces. Seize it, Pisces. It will not come again. A coworker's pride gets in the way of a project. Take up the matter with the person in charge.	 GEMINI May 21–June 21	Chaos strikes at home, but not to worry, Gemini. You will get through it with finesse. Your fitness routine could use a little boost. A magazine or newspaper article may help.	 VIRGO August 23–September 22	Pretty as a picture, Virgo. That's how the week goes for you. A financial endeavor pays off, and a road trip brings you many pleasant surprises.	 SAGITTARIUS November 22–December 21	A mission comes to an end, Sagittarius, and the accolades are all yours. The bright blooms of spring remind you that the time has come to tackle a repair at home.

"If we can't get the foundation laid, we need to at least have another skate night," Nichols said. "I know kids are getting anxious."

Mayor Michels breaks the bubbly

Nome Mayor Denise Michels was recently on hand in Seward to christen Crowley's newest tug, the Nachik.

The Nachik, which means "hair seal" in Inupiaq, will serve Western Alaska and is designed to operate in shallow waters. It will soon be joined by a sister vessel, the Sesok. The 1,362-horsepower tugs are designed for both ocean towing and barge handling. The crafts feature raised pilothouses.

"We're excited about the new construction of this unique fleet of vessels which was designed for Western Alaska to provide safe transport in our rivers and along our coastline," Michels said.

The boats were jointly designed by Crowley and Diversified Marine.

"Being God's Friend"

Reference: John 15: 9 – 17

In order to understand this passage, we need understand what the original audience of John's Gospel thought when they read this passage. Jewish culture during Jesus' time was impacted by its contact with the Roman Empire and Greek Culture. So we must understand the Greek concept of friendship based on the teachings of Aristotle.

Aristotle defined three types of friendship. The first kind of friend, according to Aristotle, is that which is useful to us. A second type of friend according to Aristotle is that which we cultivate because we enjoy the friendship. A final type of friend, the best kind, according to Aristotle, is that sort of friend made for the sake of friendship. This type of friendship is rare because it requires a level of presence and commitment that we can't afford to make with everyone or we would stretch ourselves too thin.

Aristotle further states that "a friend is another self." What this means is friends begin to take on the characteristics of one another – both good and bad. Saint Thomas Aquinas offered his take on Aristotle's idea by saying that one of the goals of the Christian life was to "become friends with God." And by becoming friends with God, we have the ultimate model in the Trinity. The Trinity helps us to understand what love truly is. It allows us to see that love is concerned with one another just as the three persons are concerned about one another.

Our passage from John today gives us some guidance on how we become friends of God. First is that we are no longer servants, but friends of God. Second is that we are appointed by God to go bear fruit. And finally, we are to love one another. Being friends with God is transformative. In being friends with one another, we are transformed by God's love, by God's peace, that we become more and more like God – we become friends with God, we are perfected in Love.

Those hearing this message of John's Gospel had been kicked out of the synagogues. How could God speak of joy amidst this situation? Today, in our situation in Nome, how can we speak of joy as well? There are some in our community who make their money off of the dependence of others on intoxicants. And there are many in our community who are affected by this – either through dependence or by being children or family of those who are trapped in this cycle of dependence. I've seen too many children having to take care of adults in this community. Yet God speaks of our joy being complete.

And what must we do? We are to form a fellowship with God – read the scriptures, engage in prayer, and practice works of mercy. These are things we all know to do, but we may have trouble doing. We are to help all God's people see they are children of God. But we can do more . . . what other opportunities are waiting for us to pursue as friends of God?

Obituary

Martha G. Craft

Martha G. Craft
Soldotna resident Martha G. Craft, 87, died Monday, May 11, 2009 at Central Peninsula Hospital in Soldotna. Her ashes will be buried at the Nome Cemetery in Nome.
Mrs. Craft was born December 15, 1921 to James Crawford and Sadie May (Kane) Gum in Cass, W. Virginia. She attended high school and furthered her education by attending clerical school in West Virginia. Mrs. Craft moved to Annette Island in 1949 and then to Nome in 1950. While in Nome, she worked for the Miners and Merchants Bank as a cashier.
In 1968 she moved back to West Virginia where she worked for Davis

Electrical in Elkins, WV until she retired. Mrs. Craft moved to Soldotna in 2005 where she resided until her death. She was a member of the Beta Sigma Phi in Nome and WV. Nome Women’s Club where she was appointed to the Alaska Commission on the status of Women in 1966 by Gov. Bill Egan and again in 1967 by Gov. Walter Hickel. Martha enjoyed knitting; she won many ribbons at the West Virginia State Fair. She also loved gardening, canning her fruits and vegetables and playing bridge.
The family wrote, “She was instrumental in starting the hot lunch program in the public school in Nome. She volunteered at Davis, Memorial Hospital in Elkins, WV and was named volunteer of the year in 2001.”

She was preceded in death by her son, David Craft; parents; and sister, Margaret Francher.
She is survived by her son Joel Craft Sr. and his wife Esther, of Soldotna; sister, Virginia McCauley and her husband Jack, of Maryland; granddaughters, Annette Burcham and her husband Aaron, of Soldotna and Martha Ellington and her husband Michael, of Nome; grandsons, Roy Craft of Anchorage and Joel Craft Jr. and his wife Michelle, of Nome; great-grandchildren, Aiden Craft, Whitney Burcham, McKinna Craft, Danika Craft, Colton Godfrey, Koryne Godfrey, Madison Ellington, Carly Ellington; and many nieces and nephews.

cause it was not designed to hold water, only tailings from the mine. This TSF was built at the bottom of a downhill slope. Heavy snowfall collects uphill and inside the TSF, so when the spring thaw hits it turns into a big lake full of toxins. Per the Plan of Operations a Water Treatment Plant and Injection Wells are supposed to be up and running to keep the TSF from being overloaded with excess water. The WTP is not operational and I’m not sure what is happening with the injection wells. So, right now water is collecting behind walls of dirt with liners that were not designed to hold a lot of water. I hate to think what will happen to the Snake River Valley should those walls not hold.
Rock Creek Mine was permitted by our government. Now we are dealing with the consequences. I don’t think it is too much to ask for tighter constraints on mining companies to provide valid, specific, safe plans of operation that show best management practices and a solid foundation for any mine that will be constructed in our state. Get it straight before you build it!

Thank you,

Dear Editor:
Another child has been killed by one of the local cab drivers. How many more times or how many more mothers and fathers will have to suffer such a loss or suffer the pain of one of their children being injured due to the lack of control and negligent behavior behind the wheel of a vehicle in Nome, another cab in this incident? How many more will it take before this community takes a stand to demand some accountability here?
How many of you could add your own harrowing story, hopefully not as severe as the one just created by this same cab company? Would it include things like this: slamming on brakes directly in front of you, turning without signaling, cutting through yards, cutting corners, (My own nephew was hit in his yard. A cab cutting a corner hit him. He lived) pulling out in front of you like a bat-out-of-hell? Rules of the road don’t apply here. They have an attitude, like somehow they are exempt? Is that $4 fare so urgent that your life, my life, can be put at risk with not so much as even thank you or” kiss my ###.”

It is early spring and along with it comes clusters of little kids playing. Which one? Is YOUR kid out there? I don’t have little kids but on occasion I am a pedestrian! I’ve heard all the excuses, I’ve heard all reasons like “it was an accident,” things happen “,” only God knows why. “ Well, which one wasn’t. Let’s do something Nome.

workers decide how they want to form a union.
It’s time to pass labor law reform that will stop employers who break the law with threats and illegal firings. We need to create incentives for workers and their employers to come together and negotiate meaningful contracts in a timely manner.
In many instances, unions and employers at hundreds of successful businesses have come together to form constructive relationships. Unions and businesses have worked together to train workers in new skills, preparing them for the kinds of jobs that will get this economy running again. Union workforces are more stable, with less turnover and fewer retraining costs.
These cooperative relationships help local communities prosper. True wealth isn’t built on top of reckless speculation. It takes the efforts of working people and responsible business owners to achieve long-term sustainability. That’s what the American dream has always been about, and it’s time for us to make that dream a reality once more.

Festival offers a marathon of fun

By Tyler Rhodes

Whether or not its namesake makes an appearance, Nome will be treated to a nonstop lineup of events this weekend for the annual Midnight Sun Festival.

Celebrating the more than 21 1/2 hours of sunlight that Nome receives around the summer solstice, the festival encourages Nomeites to join in a parade, plunge into the Bering Sea, get on stage to perform music and navigate homemade rafts down the Nome River. Anyone that makes it through each and every event offered should receive an award for stamina come Monday.

The fun begins Friday with the start of the Nome Midnight Sun Folk Fest. It's the kids who get the first crack at this year's guest performers, The Great Alaska Bluegrass Band. Kids are invited to come to a free, hour-long dance and music workshop with the band at Nome Elementary School at 1:30 p.m.

Kids of all ages can come and hear the hard-driving bluegrass of the Juneau-based band at 7:30 p.m. Friday when they play a concert at the elementary school. The show then heads to Airport Pizza where local musicians are encouraged to grab their instruments to come pick tunes with the band starting at 10 p.m.

The athletic set can get a healthy start to the weekend with the annual Gold Dust Dash race. Racers and walkers can sign up to register between 7:30 and 7:50 a.m. at East Beach. The 4-mile race starts at 8 a.m. and runs along the coast to the Nome River and back. Up for grabs are gold nuggets for the top male and female finishers.

Rescuers reel in fishermen from the sea

Quick response plucks two from overturned flat-bottom boat just offshore Nome's Front Street

By Tyler Rhodes

Two fishermen were rescued just off the shore behind Nome's Front Street Sunday evening after they were spotted sitting atop their overturned boat.

The pair were approximately 50 yards offshore when rescue crews reached them.

Rescue personnel from Nome launched a quick response en masse around 7:30 p.m., launching a jet ski and an inflatable Zodiac boat to reach Travis Murphy and his fishing partner from Sitka. Neither the Nome Police nor Volunteer Fire departments were able to identify the second fisherman.

According to the police department, the fishermen were out in a boat owned by Phil Pryzmont.

Nome resident Dave McDowell was able to see the scene unfold at Polar Cafe. "They had come out to check the net," he said.

McDowell was sitting across the room when he noticed the tourists seated at the table by the window pointing out toward the sea. "I saw them looking up and pointing at something with kind of 'that look' on their face," McDowell said.

McDowell said he looked out the window and saw two people on a capsized boat. He used a pair of binoculars to get a closer look. "It was pretty obvious we needed to call 911," he said. McDowell made the call.

Two perish in plane crash near Elim

Two Oregon men are dead following a June 9 plane crash that occurred just outside of Elim.

According to Alaska State Troopers, pilot Bruce Harden, 69, and his passenger Lonny Draheim, 54, both of Brookings, Ore., died in the incident.

The wreckage of the plane was found the next day east of Bald Head Mountain where medical personnel from Elim were able to reach the victims and confirm their deaths that evening.

Harden and Draheim were flying in a homebuilt Van's RV-7 aircraft from Galena to Nome to visit Jay Wieler, according to Wieler's sister, Janice Doherty. She noted that the crash occurred on Draheim's birthday.

A Trooper aircraft and an Army National Guard Blackhawk helicopter from Nome searched for the missing plane to no avail June 10 before responders in Elim found the downed aircraft. Troopers reported that poor weather with fog, reduced visibility and low clouds hampered search efforts.

The two gentlemen, who were close friends in Brookings, had left Oregon June 1 to fly together to Alaska in the experimental aircraft. The plane which allows its passengers to sit side-by-side in the cockpit is billed as an "all-around sport airplane with excellent cross-country capability, fine aerobatic qualities and superior handling," according to Van's Aircraft website.

Doherty said the duo had stopped in Galena for fuel after leaving from Delta Junction the day of the crash. Both men were pilots who had been flying for decades. Harden had previously lived in Alaska.

No cause for the crash had been reported as of press time Monday. The Nome Nugget's efforts to contact the National Transportation Safety Board were not successful as of press time.

Kott and Kohring released from federal prison

Former state Representatives Vic Kohring and Pete Kott returned to Alaska after their release from prison on June 12. Kohring and Kott were released under orders issued by courts in San Francisco and Anchorage. The U.S. Department of Justice last week said prosecutors had failed to turn over favorable evidence before the former legislators' 2007 trials on bribery, extortion and conspiracy. On June 10, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco ordered both men released from prison. On June 5, the US Attorney General Eric Holder filed papers in the US Court of Appeals in San Francisco seeking to release Kott and Kohring. Similar to the arguments to dismiss all charges against former US Senator Ted Stevens, the feds say that prosecutors withheld information from the defendants.

"After a careful review of these cases, I have determined that it appears that the department did not provide information that should have been disclosed to the defense," Holder said in a statement. "The department's mission is to do justice, not just win cases, and when we make mistakes, it is our duty to admit and correct those mistakes."

Holder has called for an internal review of the Justice Department's investigation of public corruption in Alaska. Kott and Kohring were convicted in 2007 and sentenced to six and three and a half years of jail time, respectively. Both were found guilty of taking bribes from oil services VECO boss Bill Allen as a bill came up to raise state taxes on oil companies.

The energy-strings-attached battle continues

While state legislators seriously mull the possibility to override Governor Sarah Palin's veto to refuse $28.6 million in federal energy stimulus funds, Palin insists in having found proof of the strings attached to the funds. The U.S. Department of Energy said that these energy funds are tied to the statewide adoption of new federal energy-efficiency codes, the 2009 International Conservation Code for residences and the 2007 American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air-Conditioning Engineers' code for commercial buildings. Currently Alaska has no statewide energy code in place and Palin favors leaving it up to local governments to install building codes or not.

Legislative leaders last week sent a letter to U.S. Energy Secretary Steven Chu, asking to keep the state's option to receive the money and to hold open the application process until legislators reconvene in January. Then they would consider a veto override. They also inquired in the letter whether a legislative resolution would be acceptable in lieu of the governor's certification of the application for the money if the Legislature overrides the veto, but Gov. Palin refuses to complete the application.

"We ask your understanding — and patience — while we resolve an internal disagreement over the funds," the legislators said in their letter signed by Senate President Gary Stevens, House Speaker Mike Chenault, Senate Finance Co-chairs Lyman Hoffman and Bert Stedman,

Letters

Dear People,

Hello, my name is Oscar Anasogak, Jr. I am from Koyuk, Alaska—born and raised. I have met a lot of you people from all over the region and state. This may come as a surprise to many, but currently I am now incarcerated at Spring Creek Correctional Center in Seward.

I am very ashamed for what I did, both to the victim, myself and for what I put my family and friends through.

Before I got in trouble I was a strong village leader with a lot of respect. I cared for and served everyone in the village; in a way I still do care, more now for the youth. The message I want to pass on is for all the youth in our region and state to respect and obey all laws. Prison is no place to be. You all have something very precious right now, your FREEDOM. Please enjoy your lives, respect everyone, obey the laws and live free.

Being in prison you have very limited rights, freedom and privacy. This is absolutely no place to end up living.

Thank you for taking the time to read this. I hope that it prevents our people from ending up in a place like this.

Sincerely,
Oscar Anasogak, Jr.
Koyuk, AK 99753

Here's to Our Health

Summertime in Nome is glorious. We've waited so long for it to get here and we've managed to pack a ton of fun-filled community events into a few short weeks. Nome knows how to have fun and ours is a class act.

Nome has talent, ingenuity and a sense of community. Our Folk Festival brings our musical souls to life. Our Summerise events promote healthy young life-styles. Our Bering Sea Polar Bear Swim gives us our annual bath and our Nome River Raft Race keep us seaworthy. Our competitive foot and bike races build our endurance. Our participation in fundraisers demonstrates our compassion and willingness to reach out.

Nome has faced tough times and economic challenges, but we are a strong community with a sense of pride in our individuality and retrosophistication. We are lucky to be surrounded by clean air, fresh water and nature's glorious flora and fauna while we constantly work on perfection of our version of another day in paradise. — N.L.M. —

Three say bye to the military

By Anna Hahn

Close to 100 people gathered in the gym of the Armory, all sitting with plates that were overflowing with food. The children younger than age 14 played basketball—occasionally and accidentally bouncing the ball off a guest’s head. The common thread in this engagement was to celebrate the retirement of three local military personnel: Dempsey Woods, Stacey Green and Reggie Bright.

On June 6, the three men were honored not only with the company of friends, family, food and basketballs, but also with awards and medals.

Lieutenant Colonel Simon Brown kicked off the ceremony with a welcome and then jumped into awarding Sergeant Woods and Sergeant Bright each with an ARMY Accommodation Medal as well as an Alaska Accommodation Medal.

Master Sergeant Green was honored with an Alaska Distinguished Medal as well as a Meritorious Service Medal.

The spouse of each of the men was awarded a certificate of appreciation for their dedication, commitment and support of their husband.

Shelter group receives advice, support from RurAL CAP

By Tyler Rhodes

As the fog lifted in the early afternoon June 10 and the warmth of the sun began to make its presence felt on Nome, a dozen people were hard at work in the fellowship hall of the Methodist Church trying to figure out how to provide shelter to the homeless the next time the temperatures sink well below zero.

While winter may seem far away as Nome was just released from the icy grasp of the previous cold season, organizers of the Nome Emergency Shelter Team know the time to act is now if they are to create a sustainable operation for next winter. To that end, the ad hoc group that is NEST gained assistance and ideas at the June 10 meeting from Melinda Freemon of Rural Alaska Community Action Program Inc.

RurAL CAP is a statewide non-profit organization that works to improve the lives on low-income Alaskans. Its services cover a wide gamut, addressing everything from early childhood education to homelessness and substance abuse. RurAL CAP's Homeward Bound, a transitional housing program, has been cited as a model by many NEST members for what they would eventually like to see in Nome.

Freemon, RurAL CAP's Anchorage Services Director, was on hand to help NEST organizers refine their plan for providing a warm place to sleep for those who find themselves without shelter when it becomes dangerously cold. NEST was able to operate a shelter out of the Nome Nazarene Church for 22 nights starting in March this past winter.

While it was successful in serving dozens of people in need, the effort was a hastily assembled, stopgap measure. By the end of the winter, volunteers were more difficult to round up and the task of organizing the shelter and staffing was becoming more onerous for the few who stepped up to take on the task. "You had your trial run and you know that everyone was really tired," Freemon said.

To confront the risk of completely burning out those who make the shelter a reality, NEST organizers were hoping to find funding to compensate a coordinator. Even more pressing than keeping a volunteer base organized and energized is the need to find a facility in which to operate. The Nazarene Church will not be available to use as a shelter next winter. "Without a place, you really can't have the service," Freemon said.

NEST has looked to the City of Nome for help in both areas by asking for $10,000 and the use of the Mini Convention Center. While some Nome Common Council members have appeared warm to the idea, the council has not yet been sold on NEST's requests. Council members told NEST representatives at its June 8 meeting that they need to see a detailed budget for the shelter and a cataloging of what other entities would bring to the table in the form of money and support before they could commit city resources to the effort.

Time is short, however, as the council is set to make its final vote on the city's 2010 budget at its June 22 meeting.

As for the use of the Mini Convention Center, the council worried about issues with liability, the city's insurance carrier and potential conflicts with other events at the facility. Councilman Jon Larson had questioned at the June 8 meeting whether the city's insurance would allow overnight stays in its facilities.

Nome City Manager Josie Bahnke attended the June 10 NEST meeting and informed the group that the city's insurance carrier, in fact, did not have a prohibition against overnight stays in its facilities. Bahnke also reiterated the council members' desire to see more concrete numbers in terms of a budget and support.

Abby Huggins, who has been acting as NEST's main contact, said the group needs help in developing a budget.

Freemon said NEST needs to first establish its priorities and plans for the next season before it can effectively chart its financial course. "You can't have a budget until you know what you want to do," Freemon said.

Freemon suggested that hiring a director may be a lofty goal at this point in the shelter's development. "The coordinator would be great, but that takes a lot of money," she said. She offered the idea of paying shelter monitors for covering the late night to morning shift, the most jarring to a person's schedule and the hardest to fill. "It's throws you off pretty far," Freemon said of working such a late shift.

Last winter, the shelter had two monitors work two different shifts each night. The first shift covered 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. and the second shift ran from 2 a.m. to 8 a.m. NEST member Emma Goodwin highlighted the difficulties for many who want to volunteer their time but can't. "I'm a full-time employee and a full-time single mother. We do the best we can," Goodwin said.

The meeting also delved into the investigation of other funding sources. The Alaska Mental Health Trust was often mentioned. Freemon said the trust has a history of providing funding to get programs off the ground.

As much as she was there to offer ideas, Freemon also acted as a sounding board to help focus the thoughts brought to the table by NEST members and channel them into becoming a working plan. Freemon challenged the group to establish a concrete vision of what they want to offer next season.

She also encouraged members to remember the successes they experienced last year. "This is really impressive. The care you showed to people for 22 nights, this is huge," Freemon said. "You can keep building on that."

McDowell said it only took 10 minutes for rescue crews to arrive and begin the effort to retrieve the fishermen. The men were brought back to shore wet but otherwise fine. Both refused treatment from the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department.

Taking place just behind Nome's busiest street, the rescue drew plenty of onlookers. Wobbly bar patrons joined teenagers and other residents along the seawall to watch the action unfold. The windows of the Seaside halfway house were jammed with residents peering out at the scene.

Midnight Sun Festival Schedule

Parade Route

The parade will run down Front St. as usual, turn onto Bering St., then take a right on 1st Ave., and another right on Division St. in front of City Hall. The parade will then proceed back down Front St. a second time and end at the State Building parking lot. Candy will only be thrown the second time down Front Street.

Come join the fun, in the Midnight Sun! Saturday June 20, 11 a.m.

Float Contest

Two of three class action suits dismissed against NovaGold

Shareholder claims involve cost estimates touted in developing idled Galore Creek open-pit mine

By Tyler Rhodes

NovaGold Resources Inc., the owner and operator of the Rock Creek Mine just outside of Nome, saw two of three shareholder class-action lawsuits against it tossed out of court June 5.

The cases involve NovaGold's Galore Creek project in British Columbia, which has been suspended since late 2007 due to mass cost overruns. At the heart of the suits brought by groups of shareholders in the company are NovaGold's disclosures regarding anticipated risks and costs in bringing the Galore Creek silver, copper and gold mine to fruition.

The ruling was handed down by U.S. District Court Judge Denise Cote in Manhattan, N.Y.

The lawsuits focus on the time period when NovaGold was fighting a hostile takeover bid by Barrack Gold. At that time, NovaGold was working to raise capital through stock offerings while touting the potential of the Galore Creek project.

According to Judge Cote's ruling, NovaGold released the results of a study by Hatch Ltd. Oct. 25, 2006 that estimated capital costs to develop the Galore Creek mine at $1.8 billion (U.S. dollars) between 2007 and 2010. A NovaGold press release said the estimates reflected a +15 percent to -10 percent level of accuracy. The Hatch study and its capital estimates were touted multiple times by NovaGold for nearly a year after that initial press release.

According to the ruling, NovaGold's first disclosure that costs were expected to exceed the Hatch study came on Oct. 15, 2007, when the company announced that it had hired AMEC Americas Ltd. to prepare an updated feasibility study for the project. That NovaGold press release noted that significant increases to capital costs were expected due to the need to build additional power lines and exchange rates between the Canadian and U.S. dollars, among other factors. While the release was dated in October, a later press release revealed NovaGold had actually hired AMEC in April.

On Nov. 26, 2007, NovaGold and its partner in the project, Teck Cominco, announced that they were suspending the project. At that time it was announced that capital costs were expected to approach $4.4 billion, mostly due to the complexity of building the tailings dam and water management infrastructure.

The defendants allege NovaGold and its directors violated the Exchange Act by giving false statements through a failure to disclose that the Hatch study was inaccurate when it was released. The claim says the study grew increasingly obsolete throughout the year in which NovaGold touted it. Cote did not rule on the merits of this claim but allowed it to proceed.

She did, however, strike two other suits that alleged violations of the Securities Act. These suits were dismissed for either being insufficient or filed too late. A one-year statutory period for such claims expired one month before the claims were filed. An initial suit was filed Nov. 21, 2008 when the NovaGold press release on which it hinges was issued Oct. 15, 2007.

In other news regarding NovaGold, the Toronto Stock Exchange announced that it has completed its review of the company in regard to its continued listing on the exchange. The exchange determined the mining firm continues to meet its requirements to be listed. The exchange initiated the review after NovaGold invoked a hardship clause to allow a deal to give Electrum Strategic Resources LLC a 30 percent stake in the company without a shareholder vote.

• Festival

urday with the annual parade set to get underway at 11 a.m. The parade will feature a few new twists this year. The route will kick off as always at the east end of Front Street at the state building, but instead of finishing at the west end of the route, it will execute a loop around Bering Street, First Avenue and Division Street back onto Front Street. The parade will then work its way back to the state building. According to the Nome Visitors Center, candy will only be thrown on the return trip up Front Street.

Also new to this year's parade will be the addition of prizes for the best floats. With a theme of "50 Years under the Midnight Sun," the Nome Chamber of Commerce is offering $100 prizes for the best festival-themed float, the best float involving youth and the judges' choice. Prizes of $50 are up for grabs for the best bicycle and the best skateboard. Floats need to be registered by 10:30 a.m. at the state building parking lot to be eligible. Winners will be announced after the conclusion of the festival's next event, the bank robbery.

Parade watchers should keep a keen eye on Front Street after the last float has passed. At high noon every year on this day, a band of miscreants seems to find its way onto Nome's main drag with the intention of holding up Nome's main bank. Find a good viewing spot in front of Wells Fargo and you will witness the bad guys nearly get away with the loot before Nome's heroes—all in turn-of-the-century garb—put the robbery to a halt and set the criminals straight.

Following the robbery you'll have just enough time to grab some barbecued chicken from the Bering Sea Lions Club on Front Street before donning a bathing suit and heading out to East Beach for the Nome Rotary Club Polar Bear Swim. Not for the faint-of-heart, the swim rewards the brave souls who take the plunge into the Bering Sea with certificates proving their light grasp on sanity. The event also features the annual "Dunk Leo" fundraiser. This year, the money raised to get Nome's own Leo Rasmussen in the drink will go toward the East End Park children's playground.

You'll have a couple of hours to drip dry before heading back to Nome Elementary to see Nome's wide array of musical talent—along with a few visiting players—for the Folk Fest Main Stage event. A line-up of nearly 20 acts will take the stage starting at 4:30 p.m. for 10-minute sets. Expect the unexpected as you never know what Nome's players will have in store for you. The Great Alaska Bluegrass Band will also take the stage for a half-hour set. The Main Stage show is free.

The music then heads over to the Polaris Bar at 10 p.m. for more of the Great Alaska Bluegrass Band's lively tunes.

You can sleep in Sunday as the festivities get a later start. Follow the traffic north out of town to the Nome River at mile 13 of the Kougark Road. There, at 1 p.m., you will find the start of the annual raft race. Featuring homemade crafts of all types, the race works its way to Dexter. If you want to race, show up at noon when the registration starts. A good viewing spot for the early portion of the race is the bridge about a mile downstream of the start. Bridge-standers, however, are reminded not to drop anything onto the floaters below.

Back in Nome, the afternoon winds down with free workshops offered by the Great Alaska Bluegrass Band at 4:30 p.m. at the elementary school. Get pointers on the banjo, mandolin, bass or guitar from the pros.

The weekend closes at the elementary school with a final concert by our guests from Juneau at 7:30 p.m.

Once the band has taken its final bow, you are free to go home, go over your photos and rest up for Monday.

If your next weekend seems empty after all the excitement of the Midnight Sun Festival, do not despair. The American Cancer Society will put on a Relay for Life event on Saturday, June 27. The walk and run is a fundraiser to support cancer patients, cancer survivors and those who are affected by cancer. The event will start at the East End Park at 1 p.m.

Tough winter means fewer cow moose hunt permits

By Tyler Rhodes

For the moment, a handful of hunters in the vicinity of Nome will again have the opportunity to hunt cow moose this fall—albeit in lower numbers.

Alaska Department of Fish and Game Area Biologist Tony Gorn said the current plan is to offer five permits for the Nome and Snake river drainages and 15 permits that cover the rest of unit 22(c). The offering is down from last year's offering of 10 permits in the nearby drainages and 20 farther away from Nome.

Gorn said the reduction is due to difficulties in tracking the population size this winter. "Because of the horrible weather we had in February and March, we didn't get to do a census in unit 22(c)," Gorn said. "You have to be really careful when you start removing cows from the population."

He added that as more is known about the population's health, the number of available permits could change. "I'm trying to evaluate what the winter kill of moose was. If I start to document large numbers of moose that died from starvation, I would either reduce those permits or cancel the hunt altogether," he said.

Gorn said the dead moose he has seen so far this season all appeared to have been killed by bears or wolves. He said examinations of bones from the dead moose show no sign of starvation.

If offered, the permits are available on a first-come, first-served basis and must be picked up in person at the Nome Fish and Game office. The permits become available at 9 a.m. on July 24.

A waiting list is established for those who don't arrive early enough to score one of the few permits available. Regulations in the unit only allow one moose to be harvested per household. Some households will participate in the bull hunt, which occurs before the cow season. If they are successful in harvesting a bull, the cow tag will be available to the next person on the waiting list. "Usually if you're one of the top three [on the list] you'll get [a permit]," Gorn said.

Gorn said the antlerless hunt was established with the goal of slightly reducing the moose population in the area. He said that even with the hunt for cows, the area was experiencing a 3 percent annual growth rate. That statistic helped lead to last year's increased quota. "It's pretty amazing that unit 22(c) around here just doesn't have large areas of good moose browse, but the country has sustained a moose population for years," Gorn said.

This year, however, has Gorn feeling a bit more conservative in regard to the hunt. "The combination of not getting a census done and having the second highest snowfall on record makes me nervous to hit the population too hard," he said.

Federal fishery council forms rural outreach committee

By Laurie McNicholas

Eric Olson, chairman of the North Pacific Fishery Management Council, announced appointments to a seven-member Rural Community Outreach Committee June 9 at a council meeting in Anchorage.

The council, which oversees the management of fisheries in federal waters off Alaska, approved a motion to create the committee in February 2009.

The committee's primary tasks are (1) to advise the council on how to provide opportunities for better understanding and participation from Alaska Natives and rural communities; (2) to provide feedback on community impacts sections of specific analyses; and (3) to recommend a specific outreach plan as needed for proposed council actions and to prioritize multiple actions when necessary.

The committee is intended to help the council improve its outreach process and analyses relevant to the concerns of communities and Alaska Natives. It is not intended to function as the primary mechanism for community input on specific council actions.

Olson, a commercial fisherman who was born and raised in Dillingham, will chair the committee. He is employed by Kwik'Pak Fisheries, a subsidiary of the Yukon Delta Fisheries Development Corp.

The other committee members are:

- Duncan Fields of Kodiak, a member of the NPFMC and owner of Shoreside Consulting;

- Jennifer Hooper of Bethel, Fishery and Forestry Resources, Natural Resources Department, Association of Village Council Presidents;

- Arnold (Ole) Olsen, a fisherman, past president of Afognak Native Corp., and a member of the Gulf Coast Communities Coalition board of directors;

- Paula Cullenberg, program leader, Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program;

- Tom Okleasik of Kotzebue, planning director, Northwest Arctic Borough; and

- Pete Probasco, assistant regional director, Office of Subsistence Management, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

The committee intends to meet this summer and report back to the council in the fall/winter. The committee is no-host, as are all council committees, so members must pay for their own travel and accommodations. The NPFMC staff contact for the committee is Nicole Kimball.

Friends of Pilgrim Hot Springs meet with CBNA administrator

By Laurie McNicholas

The Friends of Pilgrim Hot Springs, a group of Nomeites who are concerned about the future of the historic 320-acre site located off the Kougarak Road about 60 miles northeast of Nome, decided to form an organization under state law during a town meeting June 11 in the City Council Chambers.

In 1917 Pilgrim Hot Springs was deeded to the Catholic Church, which operated a boarding school and orphanage there from 1918 until the early 1940s. A church, other buildings, a cemetery and hot tubs are located on the site. A number of Seward Peninsula children whose parents died in the influenza pandemic of 1918 were raised at the orphanage. The property was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1977.

The Friends of Pilgrim Hot Springs also decided to write individual letters to Sen. Donny Olson and Rep. Richard Foster requesting a legislative waiver of the right of way requirement for the seven-mile public access road leading from the Kougarak Highway to Pilgrim Hot Springs. The road's 25-year right of way expired in 2005, explained Tom Buzek, business administrator for the Catholic Diocese of Fairbanks, which owns Pilgrim Hot Springs. Renewal of the right of way is a complex process that could take three years to complete, he explained.

Buzek also noted that the Bering Straits Native Corp. and the Mary's Igloo Native Corp. each own land along the road and have control of the access to Pilgrim Hot Springs. Several large holes in the road are filled with about three feet of water that currently prevents cars (but not trucks) from traversing the entire route.

Questions about the future of Pilgrim Hot Springs arose in March 2008 when the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska, which is the legal corporate name for the Diocese of Fairbanks, filed for bankruptcy reorganization under Chapter 11 because it lacked the resources to settle about 150 claims of sexual abuse by a few priests and volunteers. As part of the reorganization process the diocese advertised nationally and across the state in print, radio and television asking possible victims to file claims. In response the number of claimants nearly doubled to close to 300.

In a press release issued April 1, 2009, the CBNA stated that the reorganization plan the diocese has filed in bankruptcy court proposes to mortgage or sell many diocesan assets. The release said CBNA also will appeal to donors and conduct other fundraising to pay people who have filed claims for sexual abuse and cover reorganization costs.

The CBNA received possession of Pilgrim Hot Springs from the leaseholder, Art Neuman of PS, Ltd. in federal bankruptcy court last December, Buzak reported. He said the diocese had given a 99-year lease on the property to PS, Ltd. in 1969 in exchange for $500 a month and 10 percent of royalties generated through development of the site.

In court testimony Neuman cited impossibility and mutual mistakes as reasons he had not developed the property, and he did not ask to continue as leaseholder, Buzak said. The court returned possession of Pilgrim Hot Springs to the diocese because PS, Ltd. was a non-performing leaseholder.

Rather than sell the land, diocesan administrators hope to develop income-producing ventures on the property to help pay claimants. When Buzek joined the diocesan staff in 2000 he found that Pilgrim Hot Springs was one of the only income-producing properties owned by the diocese because it was leased out, he noted.

Buzek held informational meetings to discuss ideas for development of Pilgrim Hot Springs in Nome Feb. 2 and in Teller Feb. 7. At last week's meeting in Nome he said the reorganization plan filed by the diocese in bankruptcy court calls for development of projects at Pilgrim Hot Springs that will generate up to $3 million for the plan over a five-year period.

Geothermal energy potential

Buzek identified four phases of potential development for Pilgrim Hot Springs--geothermal, agriculture, preservation of historic buildings and tourism. Development of the area's geothermal resource could produce a cheaper power source for Nome than diesel fuel and could generate some income for the CBNA bankruptcy plan. Buzek is seeking investors willing to spend up to $94 million to build a 5-megawatt geothermal plant. Noting that Nome may not need that much power, he said a less expensive 2-megawatt plant could be planned if that is feasible.

The source of geothermal energy (called the hot spot) in the Pilgrim Hot Springs area is unknown. Buzek said the University of Alaska Fairbanks Alaska Center for Energy and Power applied for a $2.3 million renewable energy grant from the Alaska Energy Authority to conduct an assessment of the geothermal resource at Pilgrim Hot Springs. The proposal was recommended for funding, but was not among the final projects funded with the $25 million available this year in the second round of funding. However, ACEP's organizational director Gwen Holdmann told Buzek on June 11 that she may have found funds to conduct geotechnical research at Pilgrim Hot Springs this summer.

Buzek noted that a geothermal plant probably will need to draw from a larger area than the 320 acres owned by the CBNA. Property surrounding Pilgrim Hot Springs is owned by the Mary's Igloo Native Corp. The 1918 flu pandemic and a tuberculosis epidemic two years later devastated the village of Mary's Igloo, which currently has no year-round residents. Matt Ganley, vice president of lands and resources, Bering Straits Native Corp., said the regional corporation deeded subsurface rights to the of Mary's Igloo Native Corp. when BSNC was bankrupt in the 1980s.

Buzek said a 45-mile transmission line could be built along the Kougarak Road to transmit energy from the geothermal plant to Nome. Ganley noted that BSNC, Sitnasuak, the Bureau of Land Management and the State own land along the route. "There could be existing easements on the road," he added.

Buzek emphasized that efforts to provide a geothermal plant at Pilgrim Hot Springs will require support from Nome residents and a commitment from Nome Joint Utility System to buy power from the plant.

Other potential uses of site

Buzek said geothermal development would require a long timeframe and a large monetary investment compared to projects based on agriculture, tourism or the preservation of historic buildings. He suggested that the Friends of Pilgrim Hot Springs, the BSNC and the Mary's Igloo Native Corp. discuss uses of the property in terms of its value to all of the people of the Seward Peninsula. He said it could be used for a spiritual retreat, health retreat, community gardens, a new community and/or a museum. "All kinds of things could be done with it," he noted.

Agricultural crops and livestock were grown at Pilgrim Hot Springs during its years as a boarding school and orphanage. Louie Green, who worked for many years as caretaker of the property for PS, Ltd., said pretty good crops were produced there from 1975 to 1982. He recalled clearing 10 acres and planting mostly oats, barley and some potatoes and other vegetables. On June 3 of one year, flooding washed away the alfalfa seeds he had planted, he added.

Ganley said he has looked into a national source of funding for preservation of historic buildings and learned you cannot use the funds to directly benefit a religious organization. "This is a problem," he noted. "To improve the actual church, the way the law is, it must be separate from the [CBNA] itself. The best option is for those kinds of funds, but you can't get at them [as long as CBNA owns the church]." Ganley also questioned what would happen to investments in projects at Pilgrim Hot Springs if at the end of five years the CBNA has not derived the income from the property required under the bankruptcy plan.

Buzek displayed an aerial photo taken several days prior to the June 11 meeting that showed structures at Pilgrim Hot Springs surrounded by many large pools of water caused by flooding of the Pilgrim River this year. Green pointed out strips of land that are dry enough in summer months to produce crops.

Jana Varrati said wetlands sink when water is removed from them. Buzek replied that hot water is pulled from about 5,000 feet below the surface to produce geothermal energy, so the process does not affect wetlands. While showing photographs of a 30-megawatt geothermal plant in Nevada, he explained that high pressure water pumps drive hot water through pipes to create steam from a coolant in two separate loops. In this closed loop system, water is injected back into the ground, he added. He said a geothermal plant at Pilgrim Hot Springs would be enclosed, unlike the Nevada plant.

Some visitors enjoy soaking in tubs of hot mineral water and watching a variety of migratory birds at Pilgrim Hot Springs in summer months. Buzek asked Green how many tourists come there. "In 2007, 350 in July, 200 to 250 in June, and in August it trailed off," Green replied.

Noting that the CBNA does not have a business arrangement with Green, who plans to leave town later this month, Buzek said he must find someone to take a lease on the prop-

Nome's prevention efforts get national attention

Sexual violence prevention group tours Nome, Teller and White Mountain

By Tyler Rhodes and Diana Haecker

Remote as Nome and the Seward Peninsula may seem, the region recently grabbed the attention of some of the nation's leaders when it comes to combating sexual violence.

Leaders from the National Sexual Violence Resource Center paid a visit to Nome, White Mountain and Teller in the first week of June. As part of a larger visit to Alaska, the side trip to the Seward Peninsula was geared to show members of the national group both the problems confronting rural Alaskans in terms of sexual assault and the ways communities respond. "Part of it is a business meeting, but we also like to go out and see what is happening where we are visiting," said NSVRC Director Karen Baker. "We wanted to come here and learn about and meet real people."

The NSVRC Advisory Council's visit to Alaska can largely be attributed to council member, and Alaska State Representative Anna Fairclough.

According to NSVRC Advisory Council Vice Chair Marci Diamond, the center is a federally funded project to advocate and provide resources nationwide for sexual violence prevention and response. The group also works to ensure people have the best information about how to prevent and respond to sexual violence.

Members of the advisory council said they were both inspired and heartened by their visit here. "We learned that there is a lot of resilience, for one thing, of the survivors and of the service providers in that area," Diamond said. "That was really inspiring. There was a lot of community strength in terms of people watching out for each other, but certainly there are the challenges of just transportation and access to services if something occurs in one area and you need medical care or police response."

Baker said the visit to Alaska and Nome has helped her understand both the logistical challenges residents here face and creative solutions employed to overcome them. "It's not about how much money you have, it's how people work together," Baker said.

But money does matter. "We can see resources are a huge issue," Diamond said. "I believe the NSVRC brought a donation and some small contributions, but there is such a huge need there." Diamond, who is the director of the sexual assault prevention and survivor services office with the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, said the center is starting a couple of rural-focused programs that could benefit the region.

However, outside of direct financial support, Diamond and Baker said the center can work to take the concerns and needs of a community and make them heard on a national level. Baker said meeting in various locations around the country also enables the center to consider how national policy decisions will play out at local levels. "It allows us to ask, 'How would that work in Nome, Alaska?'" Baker said.

The advisory council is comprised of people from all over the nation and of different professions. "Not only are we from different places, we're from different backgrounds," Baker said. She said that diversity helps the center understand how different systems and communities deal with sexual violence.

The members of the national advisory council covered some ground during their visit. The meetings started in Anchorage and then moved to Nome. While in Nome, some members were able to take a side trip to Teller. Others were able to travel with the Alaska State Troopers Col. Audie Holloway in a helicopter to White Mountain.

Baker said she wasn't completely sure of what to expect of Nome. "I'd heard of the Iditarod and of the cold. ... But I've been very overwhelmed by the friendliness of the people. We felt very welcome," she said. Baker recounted encountering strangers who already knew that she belonged to the NSVRC group visiting Nome. "Strangers knew who we were."

Baker said she and other council members were treated to an amazing dinner that included many local specialties such as muktuk, seal oil and Eskimo ice cream. "The women's shelter prepared this incredible feast for us," she said. "The Bering Sea Women's Group, they shared more generously than some groups who have more resources."

Baker was particularly impressed with the resourcefulness displayed here. She noted how many residents often perform a variety of roles in serving their community, such as

Christine Schultz, a social worker who also prepares the deceased for funerals. "If there's a need, somebody's going to step up and do it," Baker said. "Everybody has an important role in the community."

Schultz acknowledged that wearing so many hats can be exhausting, but it is also fulfilling. "It can be overwhelming, but the benefits outweigh the work," she said. "You step up to the plate."

Diamond also lauded the Bering Sea Women's Group and other local resources and their work to help victims of domestic violence. "The Bering Sea Women's Group is a great, great resource. There is a child advo-

erty. He said the leaseholder would need liability insurance. He agreed with Varrati's comment that the algae-covered hot tubs are unappealing.

"There has not been much maintenance of the property for the past 40 years," Buzek noted. "Louie could testify that he did not have the resources. It should have been done per the lease of 1969. If PS, Ltd. had paid attention, the buildings could have been preserved. They are in terrible shape now. I hope the hot spot is not under the church."

Janet Tobuk recalled that her father, Tony Krier, had volunteered much time and labor to maintenance tasks at Pilgrim Hot Springs. "He replaced bridges and the next year had to replace them again," she said. "I asked my dad, 'Why put money into what's not yours?' He said he'd had a good time there."

Buzek said he is getting close to deciding to close Pilgrim Hot Springs to visitors this summer and clean up the area. He said he may post a sign on the property.

"I am saddened to hear what was said," commented Richard Benneville, who has transported tourists to Pilgrim Hot Springs for at least 15 years. "It's going against the spirit of it all."

"Maybe your business should put in a proposal first," replied Buzek. He suggested that Benneville call him.

Buzek spent last weekend at Pilgrim Hot Springs assessing conditions in the area. When he returned to Nome Sunday evening, he told The Nome Nugget that Pilgrim Hot Springs will be closed until further notice due to the 2009 Pilgrim River flood.

Buzek also said he has listened to many "heart stories" in the past few months from persons who remember good times at Pilgrim Hot Springs, have relatives buried in the cemetery on its grounds, or had friends and forebears who were raised at the orphanage or attended boarding school there. He suggested that they and all other friends of Pilgrim Hot Springs send their stories directly to him or to Bishop Donald Kettler in individual letters and state why it is important to them to keep the area accessible to the public. The mailing address for Tom Buzek and Bishop Kettler is: Catholic Diocese of Fairbanks, 1316 Peger Road, Fairbanks, AK 99709.

Buzek plans to return to Nome July 11 or 12 to spend a week at Pilgrim Hot Springs. He invited volunteers to help him clean up and paint structures at the site during that week.

The next meeting of the Friends of Pilgrim Hot Springs is scheduled June 25 at 7:30 p.m. at the Polar Cub Restaurant. Everyone is welcome to attend the meeting and to become a member of the organization.

cacy center and even the Troopers. I was impressed with [Trooper] Col. [Audie] Halloway and the local troopers there that were very interested in primary prevention and respecting folks' history and culture, and working towards where this doesn't have to happen," Diamond said.

Diamond said the visit served as an opening of a dialogue between those who work on a national level and Nome in regard to confronting sexual abuse. Such connections could help lead to national policy being written to help citizens in some of the most rural parts of the country.

Diamond said one area where that could make a difference is with the Violence Against Women Act, which heavily considers population under its funding formulas. "The council members involved in that are going to go back and try to influence some change in how that legislation gets written, to make sure that there are some considerations to geography," she said. "Just the transportation costs alone are so much larger here than in many other places. ... I think they look to get some change in the national policy level around resource allocation. That could be a huge help if they are successful at that."

Despite all the challenges that come with Alaska's remote location and sparse population, council members were able to come away with some positive reflections. "It was really inspiring to see the voluntary efforts that people put in when everybody has their own struggles and challenges, and yet they find time to help others in the community," Diamond said. "There seems to be a really strong spirit of that that I think is something to build upon."

Extra duty contracts not approved

By Janet Ahmasuk

Extra duty contracts were not approved at the Nome Board of Education meeting June 9. The vote went down 3 to 2. Betsy Brennan and Barb Nickels voted yes and Albert McComas, Gloria Karmun and Kirsten Timbers voted no. Those voting no wanted to wait until the 2009/10 Activity Handbook is rewritten because they see serious problems with what is/is not in it. Board members voting yes did not want to be unfair to the students who were already out of town or were scheduled for sports events later this summer. Also pay for activities helpers under $10,000 does not need board approval.

Outgoing Superintendent Rick Luthi offered to find three to four student handbooks from comparable schools/similar size to Nome Public Schools for the board.

The other two action items approved were a Federal Programs Administrator contract and the FY/09 Budget Revision.

In other business, Jeff Selvey, outgoing director of Northwest Alaska Career and Technical Center was presented with a service plaque for excellence, dedication to NPS and its children by Board President Karmun.

Major Gary Grennon, Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps (JROTC) instructor, announced that he has accepted a position with Anchorage's East High School as Army instructor. He thanked all for support while he was here and hopes the JROTC program continues at NPS.

Marcia Sloan from Nome Eskimo Community gave an update on the agency's on-going efforts on behalf of the NPS school children, which include the breakfast program, high school scholarships, applying for grants, school activities, implementing a program to engage more parents, culturally relevant after school programs, finding other ways to provide resources, and looking for ways to fund a Native Education specialist.

JROTC students Sam Schmidt and Casie Habetter spoke on behalf of continuing the JROTC program—how much it meant to them over the years and that support for JROTC would mean so much to NPS students.

Parent Lynette Schmidt also asked for support for the JROTC program. She said efforts so far have failed and that funding now would need a Hail Mary pass, but they aren't giving up yet. She mentioned the kids in the program have been taught leadership skills and government processes, etc. Possibilities for next year may look better.

Steve Cropsey, who works for Rover Contractors on the Nome-Beltz construction project, mentioned that all workers out at the high school project are local hires. A full crew has been showing up. He has also been befriended by a big furry dog named Piggy—his new best friend on the job.

Board member Nickels would like to be able to read public comments before the work sessions start.

Board member Brennan mentioned that the students went to Nome Common Council themselves and she would like to see NPS Board support in a letter for the JROTC program.

Superintendent Luthi announced that Nome Elementary Teacher Jon Berkely has been moved into the position of Federal Program Administrator.

Board member Nickels thanked NEC employees Marcia Sloan and Joel Alowa for attending the meeting. Other board members thanked Selvey, Maj. Grennon, NCC/budget approval, and Bering Straits Native

Corp. for the $200,000 donation to NACTEC.

At 6:48 p.m. the board went into executive session for two separate issues, a confidential student matter and a personnel issue.

The federal economic stimulus act sets a 2017 goal for states to meet energy-efficiency standards for residential and commercial construction but does not require that states count square footage or enforce the goal. The DOE has told legislators it will merely require that states prepare and promote a plan for how they could meet adequate energy-efficiency standards. Palin said, this isn't so. In a press release she said that full compliance with the strict new codes, which regulate even the type of lighting that can be installed, would cost Alaskans thousands of dollars per new home or renovation. "We took issue with Washington's universal building codes mandate and said they were unacceptable for Alaska," Palin said. "Eventually, bureaucrats at DOE admitted the requirements were 'not appropriate' and offered funding if I would just push the codes on all our communities. I believe in local control, so I said no."

HOROSCOPES

June 18 - 24, 2009

 CAPRICORN December 22–January 19	The chips are down, but you needn't worry, Capricorn. Luck is on your side. A crazy proposal is not as far out as it seems. Give it a second look. You'll be surprised by what you find.	 ARIES March 21–April 19	A hobby takes over your house. Time to get organized, Aries. Your generosity is immeasurable at a special event, and you leave feeling better than you have in some time.	 CANCER June 22–July 22	Be careful, Cancer. The rug could be pulled out from under you at work if you neglect to dot your Is and cross your Ts. An unexpected guest heats up the weekend.	 LIBRA September 23–October 22	Crazy things have happened. You know that, Libra, and it won't do you any good to get worked up about a situation that is out of your control. A whirl in the kitchen is a welcome change.
 AQUARIUS January 20–February 18	The ball is in your court, Aquarius. Make your move! The to-do list grows in the planning of an event. Relax. You'll manage just like you always do.	 TAURUS April 20–May 20	Now is not the time to make a hasty exit from a relationship. Stick in it for the long haul, and you will reap a heap of rewards, Taurus. Your fitness routine could use some tweaking.	 LEO July 23–August 22	This is your week to shine. Show off your talents, Leo, and make your wishes known. There is nothing you cannot do. A young acquaintance takes a real liking to you.	 SCORPIO October 23–November 21	The trick to succeeding at work is to know your limits, Scorpio. Don't take on anything you cannot handle and delegate responsibilities where needed.
 PISCES February 19–March 20	Great strides are made on a home improvement project, but the end is still nowhere in sight. Persevere, Pisces. The results will be too spectacular to describe.	 GEMINI May 21–June 21	Watch it, Gemini. Don't jump to conclusions. Your family is not up to what you think they are. Dodging the issue at work will get you nowhere. Confront it.	 VIRGO August 23–September 22	A minor loss is no reason to throw in the towel on the whole project. Keep at it, Virgo, and you will come out smiling. A friend lets their emotions get the best of them. Be there for them.	 SAGITTARIUS November 22–December 21	Pick and choose is your motto for this week, Sagittarius. The more thought you put into your decisions, the better the outcome will be. A family member makes an unusual move.

“Turning the World Upside Down”

Reference: Acts 17: 1-15

As we read this passage from Acts, after Pentecost, the Disciples may have been accused of turning the world upside. Paul, Silas and others were traveling the known world, the Roman Empire, looking for cities with Jewish Synagogues. Being sort of the Jew's Jew, he would go to the Synagogue for three weeks straight – argued, explained, and proved from the Scripture why it was necessary for Jesus to suffer and rise from the dead. And people listened – they did not write him off as crazy. And it was not only the Jews who listened. It was the Greeks as well – and even a few of the leading women, according to the passage. And then, according to this passage, some of the Jewish leaders, the Pharisees and such, found some ruffians to stir things up. Now, when's the last time you've heard that word? I think a better term might be operatives, sort of like the political operatives, the dirty tricks people that are much too prevalent in our politics today. These operatives stirred up trouble, and then blamed Paul and Silas! They stirred things up because they didn't like what Paul and Silas had to say, and then accused them of turning the world upside down. And when they took them to the authorities, the authorities saw what was going on, and treated it is a religious matter – not a matter of state or of criminal behavior. Now these ruffians were real troublemakers – when Paul and company moved onto Beroa and repeated the pattern there, the ruffians came and made so much trouble that Paul had to leave for Athens – and he left instructions for Silas and Timothy to join him there!

Now, when's the last time we've been accused of turning the world upside down? At least for good things?

We were probably accused of that when the early missionaries came to this area and did their very best to force everyone to act like white people. That arguably was turning the world upside down, but not the right way – that would be oppression and denying the image of God by taking away the free will God had created all humans with. Turning the world upside down would have meant defending the first people's rights to be themselves and to live as they wished while giving them the opportunity to follow Christ.

Our world is being turned upside down again today. How are we going to respond? Are we going to be happy with the way we have always done things or are we going to change and become relevant again in not just our own lives, but in the lives of the community? And as I challenge us to again turn the world upside down, I leave you with a quote from Bishop Bolton at the 1996 United Methodist General Conference: “Let's stop whining about our situation and get on with doing ministry.”

Former Nome residents Mike Schick, Peggy Schick and Barb Earp visited recently. They especially enjoyed catching up with old friends. Sh-h-h. Don't tell their folks they were here.

Some 50 years ago, these little Zorros, three, conspired to stump the parade judges by failing to identify themselves. Do you recognize them?

NOTICE OF DEFAULT — SALE OF REAL PROPERTY

A foreclosure sale will be held August 13, 2009, at 9:30 a.m. in the lobby at the main front entrance, Nome Superior Court, at the Federal Building, Front Street, Nome, AK of the Deed of Trust recorded August 1, 2002, as Instrument No. 2002-000701-0, Nome Recording District, Second Judicial District, State of Alaska, as a lien against real property described as: Lots 2 and 3 and the East 40 feet of Lot 4, Block 'G', according to the official

November 24, 1934 map of the TOWNSITE OF NOME; Records of the Nome Recording District, Second Judicial District, State of Alaska; which has a street address of 100 Front Street, Nome, AK 99762. Trustor/Record Owner Stanley Sobocienski, individually and as surviving spouse of Valerie Sobocienski, as to Lot 2; Stanley Sobocienski as to Lot 3 and the East 40 feet of Lot 4, have breached the obligation for which the Deed of Trust is security: failure to make payments when due under the Deed of Trust. Beneficiary, Wells Fargo Bank Alaska, National Association, is owed the principal amount of $55,576.81, plus interest at the current rate of 8.25% (the interest rate is subject to change from time to time based on changes in an index which is the floating rate equal to the Prime Rate set from time to time by Wells Fargo Bank plus 2.5 percentage points above the index) per annum from December 14, 2008, plus costs, fees, and other charges incurred or advanced thereafter. The Trustee elects to sell the property and to apply the proceeds against the obligation. Trustee reserves the right to postpone the sale, set a minimum bid, submit an offset bid, and establish other bidding procedures at the sale. Questions should be directed to the Law Offices of GROH EGGERS, LLC, 2600 Cordova Street, Suite 110, Anchorage, AK 99503, phone (907) 562-6474.

NOTICE OF FY 2010 GOAL PRELIMINARY APPLICATION
In September 2009, Alaska Housing Finance Corporation (AHFC) will announce the FY 2010 Notice of Funding Availability (NOFA) for its Greater Opportunity for Affordable Living (GOAL) Program. Under this NOFA, AHFC makes grants, zero-interest loans, and federal tax credits available for competitive allocation to successful pre-application respondents who will acquire, rehabilitate, or construct rental housing. In order to be eligible to apply for the FY 2010 GOAL Program, a Preliminary Application for your proposed project must be submitted to Alaska Housing Finance Corporation no later than July 28, 2009 at 4:30 P.M. The preliminary application will, in part, provide sufficient information for AHFC to determine if the project proposal meets the minimum criteria for invitation into the full FY 2010 GOAL competition. A full list of items that will be reviewed during the pre-application is available in the FY 2010 GOAL Program Rating and Award Criteria Plan. The full FY 2010 GOAL application, to be submitted in the Fall of 2009, will address other aspects of the proposed development in greater detail. These additional aspects are outlined in the FY 2010 GOAL Program Rating and Award Criteria Plan. Supporting information on all of these components will be submitted in the full GOAL application. The deadline is 4:30 p.m. on July 28, 2009. To obtain a preliminary application and find out more about these development programs, please visit the AHFC website at: http://www.ahfc.state.ak.us/grants/goal_download.cfm. ## Sunshine graces Nome's Midnight Sun Festival

Nomeites and visitors alike were likely catching their breath Monday after a sun-drenched weekend brought out hordes of revelers to a marathon of events for the annual Midnight Sun Festival.

The kids got the first crack at the festivities when the guests of the Nome

Midnight Sun Folk Festival, The Great Alaska Bluegrass Band, put on a kids' dance and concert at the elementary school Friday. A few wild rounds of bluegrass musical chairs and animal songs had the kids up and dancing. The band also let the children take a strum or two of each of the instruments.

Despite the gorgeous sunshine—an element that had been in limited quantity for the last few weeks—a good showing turned out later in the evening for an indoor concert by The Great Alaska Bluegrass Band. Brought to Nome for the weekend from Juneau, the band delivered hard-charging, high-energy bluegrass tunes along with sweet harmonies and slower songs.

That first show at the elementary school and a follow-up jam session and short set at Airport Pizza later Friday evening helped build a buzz around the band, with each performance gathering larger and larger crowds.

The festival next took to the beach in the early hours of Saturday morning. Nearly 70 runners and walkers burst off the starting line of the annual Gold Dust Dash at 8 a.m., tackling the 4-mile race along the shores of the Bering Sea (see related story on page 9).

Shelter in, JROTC out as city finalizes 2010 budget

By Laurie McNicholas
The Nome Common Council approved a general fund municipal budget for FY2010 at a meeting Monday after adding on $5,000 for the Nome Sportsmen's Association to develop the shooting range near Sunset Creek west of town and $10,000 for the Nome Emergency Shelter Team to continue operation of an emergency shelter in the winter and spring of 2009-2010.

Councilman Stan Andersen introduced motions to approve the funding requests.

NEST volunteers staffed the emergency shelter for 22 nights last March and April at the Nazarene

Church when temperatures dropped to -10° F or colder. At a meeting June 8, the council declined NEST's initial request for $10,000 in municipal funds and use of the Mini Convention Center as an emergency shelter. Council members said they wanted to see a more defined plan before committing city resources to NEST's efforts.

In response, NEST Volunteer Coordinator Abby Huggins provided the council with concrete evidence of community commitment through in-kind, volunteer, material and monetary contributions to the emergency shelter. She also prepared alternative budgets—one based on locating the shelter in a city-owned facility such as the Mini Convention Center and the other based on renovating a building such as the food bank to house the shelter.

The council also received individually written letters of support for NEST from Sitnasuak Native Corp., Kawerak Inc., Nome Eskimo Community, King Island Native Community, Norton Sound Health Corp., Bering Straits Foundation, Nome Community Center, the Regional Wellness Forum, Nome Youth Facility, Community United Methodist Church, radio stations KICY and KNOM, the Bering Sea Women's Group, the Elim IRA Council and Sue Steinacher. Several of the organizations have provided in-kind contributions to support NEST's efforts.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked whether NEST is exploring other potential locations for the shelter. Glen Pardy, housing director for Nome Eskimo Community, said the team is trying to obtain information about a two-story house at 105 E. First Street that has been condemned and may be owned by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Pardy said he became involved in NEST's

Mining permit snagged by multiple violations

By Laurie McNicholas
Bill Angus, the City of Nome's new public works director, paid an unannounced visit June 16 to a mine at Moonlight Wells operated by Marvin Rapose, dba Nome AK Gold Concentrates (NAGC).

On Monday Angus wrote a report to City Manager Josie Bahnke citing multiple violations of a city permit to mine at the site and Rapose's failure to correct the violations.

At a meeting Monday night, members of the Nome Common Council referred to Angus' report as they addressed a proposed resolution to issue a Moonlight Wells permit renewal to NAGC for the 2009 mining season. The mine is located in the area where Nome draws its drinking water.

As noted in the first sentence of the proposed resolution, "...the citizens of Nome desire to protect its potable water supply including aquifers for what is commonly known as Moonlight Springs and Moonlight Wells..." Following is Angus' report of permit violations by Rapose in the Moonlight Wells Protection area, to which he attached photographs documenting the violations.

"I conducted a no-notice visit at the subject mine last Tuesday (6/16/09) to verify compliance with the terms spelled out in the subject permit.

"I found no activity at the mine and no representatives were apparently present on-site," Angus continued. "A casual inspection revealed approximately 20 drums (55 gal) of various lubricants, approximately 30 pails (5 gal) of various lubricants, a

Corner Office

By Jason Evans
Our state spending is out of control

Our state has serious economic problems in our future. Even with the prospect of a new, huge gas pipeline, new taxes from large mining developments and the possibility of a personal income tax or a statewide sales tax, we are out of control in our spending.

The State of Alaska FY2009 Operating Budget which starts next month totals $11.1 billion and includes funding for public education, university system, public health and safety, transportation and resource development. Sarah Palin said, “This administration takes its fiscal responsibility seriously.” Yeah right, this is crazy.

In FY2002, just eight short years ago, on Tony Knowles’ last state budget, the state spent a total of $2.1 billion.

Our state has slowly built our budget to a point where it has no sustainability. We have declining oil revenue, no personal income tax, no statewide sales tax, and very limited tax revenue on mining, fishing and tourism. The outlook for our state is not good and there is nothing big enough to save us.

If we took immediate action and 1) added the taxes from a new gas pipeline, plus 2) added a sales tax AND an income tax, and 3) took away our Permanent Fund Dividend and used it for state government, we still do not have enough money to sustain this type of spending. Long-term we are still not even close to being sustainable. There is nothing out there big enough that will replace our oil revenue and yet, no one is talking about it.

To create a solution we need years of planning and discipline and that discussion needs to take place. Politicians don’t want to talk about taxes, which are political death and a sure way not to be elected. So no one is saying a word and we are going down a bad path for our state’s future.

I don’t ever want to leave Alaska, but in a few years maybe I’ll move to Hawaii. Hawaii has been a poor state for years. Maybe I’ll spend a couple years in the sun and on the beaches and learn how to deal in a state with no money and then I can move back and enjoy Alaska again.

Oil Strike

No, there has not been a big oil discovery in Nome (unless we consider all that fuel that’s still in NJU’s tanks — that super expensive stuff we purchased for the Rock Creek Mine). Since every oil supplier in the Lower-48 knows that Alaska has to make big fuel purchases every summer, they stick it to us every summer with the top dollar fuel prices.

We should fool them this year and not buy a single drop of that precious stuff. Nome probably has enough of last summer’s expensive oil to get us through another winter. If those windmills on Banner peak get cranking we might find a pleasant surprise on our utility bills. Perhaps we could purchase our fuel on futures when the price of oil drops after the last barge leaves Seattle.

We should find the cost of keeping warm will be a constant challenge. Perhaps the future Nome homes will have an array of solar tubes and panels. We need to get in gear to beat the oil profiteers. Who knows, maybe global warming will have oil tankers docking in Nome in January. Are we ready and willing to strike a change?

Letters

Dear Editor,
Here is a letter I sent to the Department of Justice.

Case U.S. v Alaska Gold Company and NovaGold Resources, Inc.
DOJ No. 90-5-1-1-09621
Public Comment on Settlement Agreement No. 2
Mr. Casey,
Violation of similar state permits
The permittee did not control off-site water quality exceedances and allowed waste to wash away from the facility. This is in violation of the State of Alaska’s Waste Management Permit 2003-DB0051.

The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation has issued notices of violations numerous times that resulted in financial penalties to the permittee.

This case primarily concerns approximately 414 acres of disturbed wetland property that was estimated to be filled with 13,697,436 cubic yards (cy) during the operation of the Rock Creek Mine.

The land-disturbing construction activities on various portions of the property resulted in violations of the National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (NPDES) permit and Section 404 of the Clean Water Act

Earthquakes shake South-central, Aleutian islands

Without much warning, except for the sudden calm and cessation of bird songs, the earth began to shake on Monday at 11:28 a.m. in South-central Alaska and along the Aleutian Islands chain. According to the Alaska Earthquake Information Center and the US Geological Survey, the initial earthquake mostly felt around the Talkeetna, Willow and Skwentna areas, registered 5.41 on the Richter scale. The shake was followed by a series of smaller aftershocks. The epicenter was located about 30 miles southwest of Talkeetna.

An even greater earthquake of magnitude 5.6 shook the Andreanof Island in the Aleutian chain at 11:55 a.m. A minute later, Southcentral felt another earth rumble with a 4.03 magnitude. The shocks were felt all the way to Soldotna, albeit weak. No damage was reported. Just as Nomeites were catching up on their sleep before the Midnight Sun festivities, the Alaska Earthquake Information Center says a magnitude 4.1 quake struck at 3:15 a.m. Saturday, June 20, about 87 miles southwest of Nome.

U.S. court OKs dumping gold mine waste in Southeast Alaska lake

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court has upheld a U.S. government permit to dump mining tailings from the proposed Kensington gold mine into nearby Lower Slate Lake, even though all its fish would be killed. By a 6-3 vote on Monday, the justices say a federal appeals court wrongly blocked the permit on environmental grounds. Environmentalists fear that the ruling could set a precedent for how mining waste is disposed in American lakes, streams and rivers.

The Army Corps of Engineers in 2005 issued a permit for waste disposal at the proposed underground gold mine north of Juneau. The Southeast Conservation Council and Earthjustice sued to halt the practice, saying dumping the mine tailings in the lake would kill fish. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco blocked the permit, saying the dumping is barred by stringent Environmental Protection Agency requirements under the Clean Water Act of 1972.

This week's Supreme Court ruling gives the mine's operator, Coeur d'Alene Mining Corporation, the green light to go ahead with the mine's development. US Senator Mark Begich commented on the decision as being good for Southeast Alaska jobs and bringing clarity to a 20-year-old dispute. "It's time for the federal agencies to work with the Kensington team to move the project forward," Begich said in a statement.

Governor Sarah Palin also lauded the court's decision. "This is great news for Alaska," Palin said. "Today's ruling is a green light for responsible resource development. Kensington will produce as many as 370 well-paying jobs. We truly appreciate Coeur's tenacity in pursuing the project and its dedication to hiring Alaskans to work at the mine." The state supported Coeur's legal efforts to move the project ahead.

Energy committee on info-gathering road trip

House Special Committee on Energy co-chairs Bryce Edgmon, D-Dillingham, and Charisse Millett, R-Anchorage and other committee members continued their information-gathering with a visit to Fairbanks last week. The trip's insights are supposed to be used to draft a statewide energy plan, due out in time for the next legislative session starting January 2010. The committee held field meetings in Nome and Kotzebue in February, in Dillingham in March and in Bethel in May.

The Fairbanks hearing took place at the Butrovich Building on the University of Alaska Fairbanks campus with 40 people testifying on topics concerning what the state can do to help promote alternatives. The forum discussed what is needed until a natural gas pipeline is built, wind-diesel technology perfected and large-scale hydroelectric projects like the long-proposed Susitna Dam come to be realized. Also discussed was finding a way to wean the state off of expensive home heating oil, using propane to replace heating oil in rural Alaska and other areas not connected to large-scale power grids, creating a statewide intertie instead of the current regional ones, and finding the right businesses to drive the new industry.

Bill proposed to keep ethics complaints confidential

House State Affairs Committee chair Bob Lynn, R-Anchorage, announced that he plans to introduce legislation in January to revise procedures for ethics complaints filed against the Executive Branch of state government. The proposed bill is in response to 15 ethics complaints filed against Governor Sarah Palin that alleged ethical misconduct ranging from wearing Arctic Cat logo wear during the start of the Iron Dog to alleged abuse of office for personal gain stemming from the Troopergate scandal, state reimbursements of questionable state travel with her children and using her office for her political action committee Sarah-PAC. A state personnel board had dismissed most complaints as having no merit. Two complaints are pending.

In regard to the Troopergate scandal, special ethics counsel Stephen Branchflower found that Palin did violate an ethics law that prohibits public officials from using office for personal gain. While ethics complaints against legislators stay confidential until found with merit, the executive branch is not guarded by similar confidentiality.

"If someone goes public with an ethics complaint against the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Attorney General or anyone in the Executive Branch before it's determined to have merit, it is not dismissed. As a result, an unsubstantiated complaint can be all over the newspaper, TV, and talk radio before it's even investigated. That's not fair. It invites frivolous complaints by people with a political agenda, wasting public money and the time of everybody involved," Lynn said.

Bering Straits Development Co. gets into hot water

By Sandra L. Medearis

Crews have been off and on the roof of the Aurora Executive Suites on "D" Street several times in several weeks installing a 40-foot bracket on the east-west wing of the building. Last week they were up there again, taking advantage of sunshine and safer footing on a dry roof, putting 150 solar heat collector tubes on the bracket at an angle to aim them toward the equator.

The exercise is Bering Straits Development Co.'s latest project to collect energy available for the taking. This time the innovative company hopes to use this Apricus solar hot water system to turn the sun's heat into hot water for the apartments. Under certain circumstances, the apparatus will provide heat to the building as well as those ahhh-inspiring hot showers. The word Apricus in Latin has to do with "sunny" and "warm."

Installers hope the solar energy collectors will both save the use of fossil fuel and yield additional benefits in providing data for other alternative energy users wanting to divert a major cost of living.

"Hot water heaters typically make up 35 percent to 50 percent of a household energy bill," said Rob Bensin, electrical power administrator for the project. "The data will allow us to better judge, install and predict payback with this real-life experience in the Nome area."

How much the solar hot water system would save depends on hot water usage, the weather and the requirements of a particular system.

Bensin chose the tube system for its high efficiency after a long study of data sheets, he said.

BSDC, owned jointly by Sitnasuak and Bering Straits Native corporations, currently has solar panels on the GREEN MACHINE—Bering Straits Development Co. has installed a rooftop solar energy hot water system to provide ahhh-inspiring hot showers at Aurora Executive Suites and burn less fossil fuel.

Old Federal Building on Front Street and operates an 18-unit wind farm north of town. The solar panels are quietly producing savings at the Old Federal Building, while the wind turbines have required more tinkering.

At a confab in the office of Jerald Brown, BSDC's chief operating officer, Brown, Bensin and Tony Parsons, construction manager, applauded the simplicity of the tubes that makes them easy on maintenance. No moving parts—unlike wind turbines that have been giving heartache—just brackets, tubes, storage tank, sensor, controller and, well, pumps to move the "free" hot water. Free, after the payback, but Brown pointed out that there actually would be payback for homeowners as the setup costs less than other solar collectors. The number of tubes can be adjusted to the need, and the system sets up rapidly.

Cost savings on various parts of the planet vary with solar levels. Energy is reduced on cloudy days. The solar tubes will not supply 100 percent of hot water year-round without backup from another energy source.

Just the same, using solar energy part of the time would mean less emission up the stacks from the boilers, Bensin observed.

So how do the tubes work?

Pretty fast. Folks attending alternative energy classes in Nome have seen Nomeite Dave McDowell, already basking in the benefits of his Apricus installation, demonstrate how one of the tubes placed outside a meeting hall on a cloudy day in winter came back in with the metal tip hot as a firecracker in 10 to 15 minutes. The individual tube comprises two layers of toughened glass with a vacuum in between the layers. The vacuum layer acts like the Thermos bottle in your lunch bucket, preserving about 97 percent of the energy absorbed from the sun. This increases efficiency of the collector and protects it from cold air. Manufacturers say the system does not need antifreeze.

The sun's energy transfers to the water by way of heat pipes inside each tube. Heat transfer liquid circulates through a header and goes to heat exchangers in two 119-gallon tanks containing domestic water that is heated and stored. During short days, the water in the tanks might only be conditioned for assisting the domestic hot water heater. The tanks also have a second heat exchanger for heating the complex when domestic hot water demands are met. An outdoor temperature sensor controller will lower the heating transfer liquid in the boiler system when the outside temperature is above 30° F.

The solar hot water system has been designed for northern climates, according to manufacturers based in Australia, and targets markets in northern United States and northern Europe.

One sunny day last week Bensin came out of the Executive Suites after checking the solar hot water system. "It's working," he beamed. "The water is hot and the system is dissipating surplus heat outside."

In the United States, the Apricus solar tube collector system falls under the benefits of a federal government energy credit system.

Meanwhile, Parsons frequently has a clipboard in hand to read the meters on another project—the flat panel solar collector system and basement boilers at the Old Federal Building on Front Street across from the post office. There, Parsons can log how long boilers are operating down to 1/100 of an hour and keep track of wind speed and temperature outside as part of data collection on the solar panels.

The activity and data collection in energy issues is in BSDC's business plan to make alternative energy and energy-saving devices available to the public, such as LED light bulbs—giant steps ahead of spiral compact fluorescent bulbs—for domestic and commercial applications.

• Mine

pallet of approximately 12 lead acid automotive type batteries, a medium duty truck with a large bulk fuel tank mounted on the back, approximately ten jugs of anti-freeze (1 gal) and a large stained area on the ground that clearly indicates that oil had been spilled (not recently). All of these items were within the "Protected Area" and all are violations of the permit. After returning to my office, the applicant arrived unexpectedly. I told him that I just returned from visiting the mine and shared my concerns with respect to these violations. I told him that the materials had to be removed from the site prior to the Public Hearing in order to gain a favorable report/recommendation from me. I also told him that I would report my findings to the City Manager. I provided the applicant copies of the 2008 permit, the related application prepared by NAGC, and a draft copy of the Temporary Operations Permit. He was told verbally and in writing what the specific violations were and the importance of getting the violations off the site.

"Today, I called the applicant and asked permission to revisit the site," Angus wrote. "He wanted to meet with me and came to my office. He said the batteries were gone and the 5 gal pails were emptied. Upon my arrival, I met the applicant and again looked around the site. I saw that most of the 5 gal pails were open and empty with residual oils still in the bottom. He said the oils were consolidated into one pail which was accepted at the landfill. There were about ten pails yet to be opened and emptied by the applicant. It seems unlikely that: a pail of oil was accepted at the landfill and that a trip would be made all the way to the landfill without emptying the few that were remaining. I suspect the oil was dumped on-site somewhere. The pallet of lead acid batteries was still on-site, just as it was last week. I believe the applicant was trying to deceive me when he said the batteries were gone."

Angus made the following recommendations:

"1. Grant temporary permit effective in a week, subject to removal of all violations (verified by me).

"2. Final and proper...disposition of all offensive materials to be physically inspected and verified by me. (It is too easy to simply bury things out there).

"3. Over excavation and proper disposal of all contaminated soils (verified by me prior to backfill).

"4. Submit to random, unrestricted, and unscheduled site inspections at interval not to exceed two weeks."

Councilwoman Mary Knodel moved to amend the proposed resolution issuing a Moonlight Wells permit renewal to NAGC for the 2009 mining season to include the four recommendations by Angus. The council approved both the amendment and the resolution as amended by votes of 4 to 1. Stan Anderson, Jerald Brown, Knodel and Randy Pomeranz voted yes; Jon Larson voted no. Councilman Neal Foster was absent from the meeting.

Dr. Derrick Leedy recently complained to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and to the Nome Common Council that violations of state and federal environmental standards are taking place in the NAGC mining operation. In a letter to the council dated June 19, Leedy states:

"There are State and Federal stormwater violations in both the Marvin Rapose and Betty Crutch mining operations on the west and north side of Anvil Mountain. Some of the lands may be leased by Alaska Gold or Private Mineral Holders.

"There is also a violation of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game habitat permit that is [a]ffecting Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) in Anvil Creek and its receiving waters. Turbidity levels are way beyond the limits set by the Alaska Water Quality Standards..."

Accompanying Leedy's letter is a photo of outflow from the Marvin Rapose mining operation that Leedy says shows turbidity exceeding Alaska Water Quality Standards.

In his letter Leedy recommends that the council contact Eva DeMaria, EPA Office of Compliance and Enforcement, Region 10, about the National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System permit program and to arrange for an agency to inspect both mine sites. He also recommends that the council have the landowners develop and implement a mitigation plan to correct the stormwater discharges.

"Wait until this is completed prior to the issuing of a permit for the Moonlight Springs Watershed Protected Area that is about 3.5 square miles," he advised. "Only issue a permit for mitigation at this time.

"The city faces a huge liability if a permit is issued," Leedy concluded.

Sinking houses, stinking swamps spur complaint to NJUS

By Sandra L. Medearis

Some houses at East End sit in a swamp replete with moss and algae.

These backyard lakes and deep puddles beneath houses may result from sewer and water construction projects, road construction, melting permafrost, or any combination of several of these.

Whatever the cause, the situation is lowering yards and property values by destroying landscaping and raising safety and health risks in their neighborhood, several residents told the Nome Joint Utility System board of directors on June 16. These homeowners want the issue on the agenda at next month's meeting so that the utility can look at whether soil testing and hydrology played a part in designing the water and sewer installation with proper or dysfunctional drainage along Sixth Avenue.

NJUS board and staff said they could take a look, but that the responsibility for drainage belonged to the City of Nome.

Jana Varrati who lives at Fifth Avenue and "I" Street, told the NJUS panel that when she and spouse Ben Esch bought their home, yards between "H" and "I" streets were all at the same level and seeded with the same grass—beautiful—until a couple of years ago. Now water that flows in and ponds from thaw to freeze up has spoiled the yards and stagnates beneath houses, according to Varrati.

"Our front yards are full of sink holes, huge chasms and swamps. Water is accumulating under our homes; some on pads (and some on pilings) are sinking at a rapid rate," she said. "It looks and smells like polio water [stagnant disease-bearing water]," filled with "mosses and unsavory growth."

Varrati alluded to City liability for lowered property values and the risk of a child drowning in one of the "lakes."

Varrati, as did her neighbors Kris Busk and Scott Kent, asked the board to get the issue on the next agenda to allow staff to drive by the water-logged area and look at maps and hydrology.

Busk asked that NJUS investigate the causes and look into designing a solution, maybe drainage parallel and perpendicular to the affected property.

"My main concern is the safety of Nome's citizens," he said.

Some board members were ready to dive into the "lakes" and begin a vigorous backstroke, saying that handling this issue was the City's job—road crews only build what and where they are told to build.

"Is it a utilities issue or a City drainage issue?" asked board member Carl Emmons. "Drainage of the City is way beyond our scope."

Utilities director John K. Handeland said staff would pull files and videos to take a look at utility work in the area.

In the discussion, board members cited examples from personal knowledge of other sink holes and swamps that they attributed to the warmer climate melting ice lenses associated with permafrost. The melting of these slabs of ice that go vertical or horizontal beneath building sites causes houses all over town to go up and down like the music from a circus calliope.

"There's a lot of ice in the ground up there," Emmons said.

In fact, NJUS board president Jimmy West Jr. said, "In the Sixth Avenue job, they over-excavated and replaced it with better material."

The best material to underlie construction projects in the arctic would be sand and gravel to help defeat the forces of permafrost and melt.

Heaving ground beneath buildings comes partly with water flowing in to make ice lenses that push up, separate and melt under certain conditions to drop the level again. The water doesn't rise in sand and gravel. Water rises in clay, but slowly, not to make lakes and ponds in the yard out the back bedroom window. Silt is the culprit, like silt that goes along with old beach lines.

Silt wicks the water up the worst, ice scientists and geologists say. Add warmer temperatures or drainage from utilidor removal and thawing of permafrost goes top to bottom until it has gone deep enough to drain the impromptu lakes. The quick analysis is that ground needs to remain frozen or home owners need to keep filling until the site stabilizes.

HANDOFF—Jana Varrati provides photos to NJUS board member Fred Moody showing swamps and small lakes that plague property owners on the east end between "H" and "I" streets along Sixth Avenue. Utility manager John Handeland is seen in the background.

Varrati and her neighbors are filling their land.

"As owners we realize our responsibilities for upkeep and maintenance of our properties, and we have put in load after load of fill to try to deal with this problem," she said. "It keeps getting worse."

The problem did not show up until the project to fill Sixth Avenue.

"The installation of utilities on Sixth Avenue brought this problem to light and exacerbated it," Varrati said.

The board will discuss the issue further at the next regular board meeting in July.

Post office, court may get new landlord

By Sandra L. Medearis

About a dozen interested parties representing themselves, nonprofit organizations and local government met with federal real estate officials to find out more about impending disposal of the Federal Building on Front Street.

This building is where good citizens report for court jury duty and pick up their mail at the post office. The building has been referred to the real estate disposal section of the Government Services Administration because not enough federal offices occupy the building. The June 17 meeting in the court area was preliminary to what could be a yearlong process to determine who will be the next landlord.

"The ratio is off. There is a lack of tenants with less than 50 percent federal occupancy," Blaine Hastings manager of GSA property disposal, northwest arctic region, said. "This building has been determined excess to GSA need."

efforts last October. He suggested that a city official or a council member become a permanent member of NEST.

JROTC funding nixed

The council rejected a motion by Andersen to add $118,000 to the city's FY2010 budget to continue the Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps program at Nome-Beltz High School. Andersen and Jerald Brown voted in favor of the motion, while Knodel, Jon Larson and Randy Pomeranz voted against it. Councilman Neal Foster was absent from the meeting. Last year Nome Public Schools deleted JROTC funding from its budget, and the council subsequently approved a motion by Andersen to add $136,000 for the program to the City of Nome's FY2009 general fund budget.

In testimony Monday prior to the vote, Barb Nickels, a member of the Nome Board of Education said the board cannot fund the JROTC program but supports its missions, goals and positive impacts on students. Copies of a letter from board President Gloria Karmun in support of the program were distributed to council members.

JROTC Cadets Gregory Saclamana and Landis Bjorgen advocated for funding to continue the program next year, citing its benefits to students and community services performed by cadets. Bjorgen said cadets had raised $5,804 through car washes and other activities, received pledges of $16,100 in contributions and have $4,000 in a JROTC account, for a total of $25,904. He asked the council to allocate $118,096 in municipal funds to the program for the coming school year.

2010 City budgets adopted

The council approved an FY2010 general fund budget totaling $10.228 million based on a property tax rate of 7 mills. Other FY2010 City of Nome budgets adopted by the council Monday were:

- The capital projects fund budget totaling $9.7 million. Grants and appropriations from federal and state agencies and other entities fund this budget.

- The Port of Nome budget totaling $4.58 million, $3 million of which are Federal Emergency Management Agency funds for repair and maintenance of the Cape Nome quarry.

- The special revenue fund budget totaling $278,321. This budget accounts for revenues and expenditures for grants, contracts and agreements that the City accepts for purposes other than direct operational and administrative expenditures in the general fund budget.

- The construction capital projects fund budget totaling $2.96 million. This budget accounts for revenues and expenditures associated with school and port construction bond monies.

Other council actions

Knodel made a motion to approve a request from Gary Hart, dba Nome Checker Cab Inc., to transfer his six taxi licenses to Rodney Jones effective Aug. 1. Larson moved to amend the motion to say that Jones must comply with all provisions of applicable City ordinances before the taxi licenses are transferred to him. The council approved the amendment and the main motion.

In a letter to the council dated June 9, Rhonda L. Komok appealed a decision by Chief of Police Dallas Massie to deny her application for a Chauffeur's License with the City of Nome. She also appealed the decision in public comments during the council meeting. In a letter to Komok dated June 5, Massie said he is unable to approve the application because she does not meet the requirements set forth in the Nome Code of Ordinances Section 3.10.030.

During the council meeting, Brown asked Massie to comment on Komok's appeal. Massie said he could not go into all the reasons for issuing the denial in an open session. Council members met with Massie in executive session, following which they voted unanimously to deny Komok's appeal.

City Manager's report

City Manager Josie Bahnke said

Nome Volunteer Fire Department Chief Matt Johnson and three NVFD volunteers have flown to Wisconsin to inspect the department's new ladder truck and drive it to Washington state for shipment to Nome on a barge.

Bahnke recently met with staff of Sitnasuak Native Corp. to discuss placement of the Two Eskimo Boys statue on the southwest end of Anvil City Square. A life-size statue of Constantine Uparazuck and Gabriel Adams with two huskies will arrive in Nome by barge in July, announced SNC Chairperson Crystal Andersen-Booth in a letter dated June 1 to the City of Nome.

Nanooks let loose in the jungle

Nome-Beltz Spanish Club gets a taste of life south of the border in Costa Rica

By Tyler Rhodes

While some Nomeites were still skiing and many were waiting for that last patch of snow to disappear from their property, a group of 15 of their neighbors were basking in humid 80°F days in the jungle.

After more than a year of planning and fundraising, 11 Nome-Beltz High School students and their four chaperones spent 10 days in Costa Rica taking Spanish language classes in the morning and rallying for various adventures in the afternoons. The trip was organized by Nome-Beltz Spanish teacher Erika Eaton.

The crew departed Nome in the early afternoon May 29, arriving in San Jose approximately 24 hours later. The group quickly bypassed the Central American country's capital and largest city, taking vans for a three-hour trip to the town of La Fortuna in the northwest part of the country in the Alajuela Province.

Last week, students Kailyn Kashevarof, Cori Eide, Jeff Rose and Niki McGuffey, along with Eaton and chaperone Nikki Polk, met with a Nome Nugget reporter to share some highlights of the trip. Other students on the voyage were Alex Morgan, Sean Yi, Mark Steiger, Emerson Conger, Mason Evans, Josh McComas and Rene Lammer. Filling out the ranks of the chaperones were Bobby Evans and Mari Lammer.

When asked about their favorite experience from the trip, the word "zipline" quickly leapt out of the students' mouths. Suspended hundreds of feet above the jungle and tethered to a cable that ran through the trees, the group raced at speeds up to 50 mph along the lines as they descended toward the ground.

While the conversation bumps from highlight to highlight—white-water raft trips, canyoning expeditions and hot springs—there is also a surprising revelation for a bunch of students who just got out of school. They enjoyed their language classes.

"At first I didn't want to do it at all," said Eide, who graduated this year. The students, however, quickly warmed to the classes held each morning in La Fortuna. "It really helped my conversation skills," Eide added.

McGuffey said she saw her ability to both speak and comprehend improve quickly. "Speaking it got way better for me," she said. She noted she wasn't always able to follow conversations word for word, but would pick up enough key words to know what was being discussed.

Some students found that they were better prepared to speak the language than they thought. "It was a lot easier than I expected it to be," Kashevarof said.

While Eaton enjoyed the more adrenaline-fueled elements of the trips, like ziplining, her highlight came from watching her students progress with their language skills. "The best part of the trip for me was seeing my students start using their Spanish spontaneously with each other around town," Eaton said.

The students reported having an easier time understanding Spanish in the small town of La Fortuna versus the larger cities of San Jose and Turrialba, where they spent some time as well. "When you go to the city, they talk so fast," Eide said.

They also found more patient listeners in the small town. "People in La Fortuna were more used to tourists," McGuffey said.

Not only was the language a bit foreign, but also the customs. The students talked about seeing school children head to school at the early hour of 7 a.m., all wearing uniforms. The also noted that the Costa Rican students' extracurricular activities differed a bit. "They're really good at soccer," Kashevarof said.

The group did get some interaction with local students—on the Nomeites' terms—through a game of basketball. "They were OK. They couldn't shoot, but they handled themselves," Rose said. The advantage, however, was definitely with the Nanooks.

Other little differences between home and Costa Rica also struck the group. The students said they were surprised to see that the television programming would be a mix of Spanish and English shows. The same applied for music on the radio.

The trip also gave the students chances to taste new foods. They were introduced to tamales wrapped in banana leaves, juices sipped straight from the fruit through a straw and other exotic fruits. McGuffey said that although she missed Starbucks, she enjoyed the Costa Rican coffee, learning to drink it black.

The trip also gave the students chances to have upfront encounters with animals—some wild and some not-so wild. The group visited a farm outside La Fortuna where they saw a dairy operation. Each student got a chance to milk a cow. Some kids had more luck than others with the task. "I just couldn't milk it for some reason," Rose said.

The students also saw coffee plants and pineapples growing, as well as yucca plants and pepper trees.

The farm trip also included a walk into the nearby jungle where students spied many tiny poisonous frogs, giant leaf-cutter ants, big butterflies and centipedes.

The group also encountered other animals throughout the trip that were

WELCOME TO THE JUNGLE—Nome-Beltz Spanish Club members (left to right) Niki McGuffey, Sean Yi, Cori Eide, Emerson Conger and Jeff Rose take a break in the central plaza in La Fortuna, Costa Rica in early June. not quite as exciting to see. "The bugs scared me," McGuffey said. She added that they would put geckos into their rooms in hopes they would eat the bugs.

Some of the other animals experienced on the trip were just outside the hotel. "I would wake up to roosters every morning," Eide said.

The students also got a taste of life in a country where the social and political systems do not work quite the same as in the United States. On the way to a raft trip near the city of Turrialba, the traffic on the highway began to thicken before it came to an abrupt stop. The group's van driver was able to snake his way through the gridlock until he could go no farther and the source of the bottleneck was discovered.

Just 15 minutes away from the start of the raft trip after a three-hour drive that started at 5 a.m., the group's journey came to an end for much of the day. Workers from nearby pineapple plantations had barricaded the roads to protest working conditions and the effects of pesticides in the drinking water they used. The large group of workers, while peaceful, would not let traffic pass in either direction. "It was like a sit-in protest," McGuffey said.

While getting a bit of a cultural lesson, the students made the best of the four to five hours spent waiting on the side of the road. Food vendors appeared out of nowhere selling partially frozen juices and other cool snacks and drinks. "It was very calm," Polk said. "People selling things made it all the more clam."

While many of the days on the trip were tempered by afternoon rain showers, the weather this day was warmer. "It was the only day I was actually able to get a tan," Eide said.

Once the barricade was opened the group was able to finally drive the final few miles to Turrialba. They arrived too late, however, to raft that day. The group made up for the lost time the next day with a canyoning trip in the morning and a raft trip during the afternoon. The students gave the raft trip high marks. McGuffey said their guide was great, with the students teaching him some English. She said the group sang songs as they bounced down the river.

The students' short stay in the city of Turrialba had a different feel than that of the more touristy La Fortuna. The traffic was more hectic, the streets more crowded. The city also held some surprises. Rose described turning a corner during a walk and arriving in a giant market. "All of the sudden we were in this huge warehouse. It was jam-packed," Rose said. He said he was surprised to find stands selling trinkets and items of all sorts, from clothing and food to DVDs, all spread pell-mell throughout the market.

Even with its more chaotic atmosphere, Rose said he would have liked to spend more time in the larger city. Overall, he was surprised at the modernity of the nation. "I was expecting it to be a little more third-world," he said.

Eaton gave her students high praise for their enthusiasm and how they handled themselves during the trip. Whether it was trying new foods or putting up with a four-hour roadblock, she said the group was willing to go with the flow. She said she would be willing to go back with the same group in a heartbeat.

Eaton also expressed gratitude toward all the support given by parents, community members and organizations in helping make the trip a reality. Several community entities donated funds, and parents and students logged countless hours baking and selling goods, washing cars and organizing rummage sales to raise funds to cover the expenses.

• Federal buiding

Current occupants would not be kicked out, Hastings said. GSA would help them negotiate a new lease with new landlords or find a place to move.

Another federal agency would have first grab at the two-story building, Hastings said. Right off, the federal Department of Health and Human Services, and Housing and Urban Development, under priority consideration, could evaluate the property to assist the homeless. That designation would be good for 30 years.

"If it is suitable, they can have the first jump," Hastings said. "Federal agencies don't seem excited. We don't anticipate a response."

The local and state governments, schools and city included, stand next in line to get the building at a price discounted up to 100 percent—meaning for free—as a public-use conveyance for library, museum, port facility, law enforcement, self-help housing or the like.

"We can convey it to the city at no cost," Hastings said, adding that the building is in the historical district, so "the city can acquire it as a historical monument."

State and local government could lease the building, and even make a profit, to defray maintenance and the like. It is likely folks will not be making U-turns and double parking in front of a different post office.

"We have a good core of tenants who mostly have indicated no desire to move," Hastings said.

If there are no takers among government agencies, then the building would go on the block for fair market value to other qualified public uses or private individuals. However, there would be no local preference, with the sale listing going on the Internet for all interested. Speculators beware, however, as there is a clause in effect for a certain period of new ownership to prevent localities from "land banking" property and then selling it for a higher price to a third party.

"We have no interest in seeing it go to one organization or another. We will send a notice to the mayor," Hastings told the group. "We are hoping we can find a good owner for the building and everyone would be happy."

Several local people asked about asbestos issues. GSA realty specialist

Fred Zderic said he did not think any abatement would be needed to use the building as it stands.

Red king crab processed at Nome plant

By Laurie McNicholas

As Travis Murphy and Jason Johnson filled totes with their red king crab catch Sunday morning at the Northern Norton Sound Seafood Products plant in Nome, Robin Thomas and Randy Hoogendorn chopped crab bait—frozen herring and water-marked chum salmon harvested last year—for their return trip to the crab grounds.

On the previous Sunday, June 14, rescue personnel had plucked Murphy and Johnson from atop an overturned flat-bottom boat about 50 yards offshore from the beach behind Nome's Front Street. The Norton Sound summer commercial fishery for red king crab opened at noon the following day.

While Murphy and Johnson offloaded their catch, Richard Okinello and David Walluk removed live crab from holding tanks filled with seawater at about 36°F and placed them in totes for processing. A couple of days earlier the plant had processed its first 2,000 pound crab batch of the season, according to NNSSP manager Rich Ferry.

Eric Osborne said he had found crab all over the fishing grounds off Golovin, but no concentrations of crab in any spot. He made his first crab delivery to the NNSSP plant last Friday. On Sunday he was preparing to take on bait and ice at the plant for his second crab trip of the season. Frank McFarland was expected to deliver a load of crab to the plant on Sunday afternoon.

This summer's commercial red king crab fishery quota is 375,000 pounds, reports the Alaska Department of Fish and Game. Of that amount, 7.5 percent (28,125 pounds) is allocated to the Community Development Quota fishery. The Norton Sound CDQ and open access king crab fisheries opened simultaneously this year.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., one of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Program, represents 15 member communities in the Bering Strait region. NSDEC owns the NNSSP plant and operates the Southern Norton Sound Seafood Products plant in Unalakleet, which processes salmon and herring.

National report calls for emission reduction

In effort to curb global warming, society to understand complexity of global warming

By Diana Haecker

Climate change is real, and yes, primarily induced by man-made greenhouse gas emissions, says a new federal report titled "Global Climate Change Impacts in the United States."

The 190-page study was commissioned in 2007 and released last Thursday. It is the product of a consortium of 13 US government science agency experts, led by the National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration.
